LOCAL DOTTINGS.

A phantom party at the court house on Friday night.

Mr. B. H. Chestnut has been confined some days with mumps.

A traveling commercial college has established itself in Clanton temporarily.

Mr. R. Ehrman has gone to New York to purchase his Fall and Winter goods.

Misses Viccie and Ella Barnes, of Columbus, Ga., have been visiting relatives at this place.

Miss Emma Boykin is visiting relatives in Columbus, Ga., and her presence is missed in Clanton.

Mr. John Garner is filling up the Gullahorn store house, which he lately purchased, with a stock of new merchandise.

A protracted meeting is now in progress at Mulberry Baptist Church under the superintendence of Rev. J. M. McCord, the pastor, assisted by Rev. Mr. Elam.

The first open boll of the new crop of cotton was handed us by Mr. W. T. Cullen. It was obtained from the farm of Mr. Alfred Baker, Sr., near Clanton.

On behalf of the Democratic Executive Committee of the county, Chairman Brittle publishes a congratulatory address to the Democracy.

If you desire to insure your life read the announcement of the Mutual Reserved Fund Life Association of New York. You can insure with the local agent at Clanton.

We learn that the cotton crops of the lower portions of Chilton and north Autauga are suffering from rust. Only about two thirds of a crop will be made. The corn crop is good.

Mr. Willis Lowe is one of the cleverest of the clever. We must believe so since he sends the VIEW so many fine melons and fruits that one feels inclined to say: "Who wouldn't be an editor."

Miss Lee Pou, after a pleasant visit of several weeks to relatives in Clanton, returned to Autaugaville Monday, to the great regret of numerous friends here, who hope to see her return before many moons have moved.

During the past month a series of protracted meetings held at the four different Methodist Protestant Churches in this county have resulted in fifty accession to the churches. Rev. T. A. Gibson, formerly of Pike county, is the pastor of these churches.

Mrs. M. J. Bandy and Mrs. G. W. Deramus, of Jemison, visited our town on Monday in the interest of a new church at Jemison for which they are securing contributions. We are glad to know that they succeeded well with their praiseworthy undertaking in Clanton, and the church is an assured fact.

The new county officers have filed their bonds, and entered upon the discharge of their various duties. Following are the bonded officers: J. T. Smitherman, Sheriff; W. A Smith, Tax Assessor; R. M. Honeycutt, Tax Collector; and J. M. Parish, Treasurer. The retiring Sheriff made an excellent officer, and his successor will do the same. The other three are old men in the positions which they fill; they have heretofore filled the positions efficiently, and we doubt not will continue to do so.

The vote for Sheriff amounted to 1,822. Smitherman received 911, and the other two candidates together received exactly 913, showing that if the opposition had united upon one man there would have been a tie vote between the nominee and his opponent.

Dr. Joiner, Dentist, of Montgomery, will visit Clanton next Thursday, the 28th inst., and will remain here until the first of September, when he will return to his office in Montgomery. Parties desiring work done in his line should make a note of this, and call on Dr. J. while he is here as he has the reputation of being an excellent dentist.

Judge Falkner's Majority.

The official returns in Elmore give Judge Falkner for the Senate 1,927 votes and L. F. Goree 1,112. Falkner's majority 816. In this county his majority reached 1,386, and in Coosa it is estimated at 250 or 300 making a total majority in the district of about 2,500.

Attention Farmers.

It is suggested by a number of active and progressive farmers that a meeting of the farmers of Chilton county be held at Clanton, on Wednesday, the 27th inst., for the purpose of selecting delegates to the State Agricultural Convention which will meet in Montgomery, on the 28th and 29th inst. Every farmer should attend this meeting and if possible attend the State Convention also.

A Splendid Offer.

The VIEW would remind its readers that it is offering as a premium to cash in advance subscribers one of the very best farmer's papers published in the United States, The Western Plowman. It is a sixteen page journal full of interesting and instructive reading for farmers, and will cost you nothing. Come in and subscribe for your home paper and get this fine journal FREE.

Those who cannot come to Clanton can send their names and money by mail or hand.

Tell your neighbor of this, and induce him to subscribe.

If an editor omits anything he is lazy; if he smoothes down the rough places he is bribed; if he calls things by their proper names he is not fit for the position of editor; if he does not furnish his readers with jokes, he is stupid; if he does he is a rattle-head, lacking stability; if he condemns the wrong he is a good fellow but lacks discretion; if he lets wrongs and injuries go unmentioned, he is a coward; if he indulges in personalities he is a black guard, if he does not his paper is insipid. In short if he edits a paper properly and sticks to the truth and facts, he is a fool and doesn't know how to edit a paper half as well as his readers could.—Exchange.

Verbena Views.

Mrs. G. W. Craik and Miss Alma Baldwin, of Montgomery, spent Sunday and Monday in our village, the guests of their uncle, Col. B. J. Baldwin.

Mrs. McD. Cain and Mrs. Peter Buyck, of Wetumpka, are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Brooks.

Master Eddie Shannon returned to Sewanee, Tenn., last Monday night to resume his exercises in school.

Misses Emma and May Due, two of Wetumpka's most charming young ladies, are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. G. L. Zimmerman.

Mrs. J. D. Beale, in company with her brother Mr. Sid Phelan and his wife, left last Tuesday morning for New York. While north they will visit Saratoga, Niagara Falls and other Northern watering places.

Mr. W. L. Chambers, cashier of the National Bank, Montgomery, spent last Sunday in our village the guest of Maj. Gibson.

Mrs. R. L. Watt, of Montgomery, is stopping at the Clifton house.

Miss Rosebud Lynch, of Montgomery, is visiting Miss Annie Mitchel.

Mr. Jas. A. Allen and his son Claud, of Birmingham, spent last week in Verbena, the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Pitts. Mr. Allen is a brother of Mrs. Pitts.

Messrs. Lewis Cantelou and Ed. Smith, of Wetumpka, attended the ball at the Clifton House, last Friday night. They are excellent young men and will always be welcomed in our town.

One of the most enjoyable affairs of the season, was the ball at the Clifton House last Friday night. It was a farewell ball given to Misses Leila and Eliza Ricks, on their departure for their home in Eufaula. They spent several weeks with Mrs. Jackson and while here made many friends. They are two of Eufaula's most estimable young ladies, and they may rest assured that they will always receive a cordial welcome from their friends in Verbena whenever they feel disposed to pay them a visit.

The family of Mr. Wm. Hardy, of New Orleans, are stopping at the Clifton House. They spent the first portion of the summer at Blount Springs and came from there to this point. Several families will move from Blount to the Clifton House, the first of Sept.

The protracted meeting at the Baptist church has met with such success, that they have decided to carry it on a portion of this week. As many as twelve or fifteen persons have been converted and joined the church up to the present time. From the present outlook the meeting will be continued all the week.

The hardest rain that Verbena has experienced for sometime fell last Tuesday evening. It was much needed in this locality and was very refreshing to all vegetation.

Mr. Charles L. Reid, Verbena's enterprising fancy grocery merchant, has gone on a short trip to the prairies. He has been closely confined to business for some time, and was in need of recreation. He will visit Pike-Road, Matthews and other places of note on the M. & E. R. R. MAX.

Alonzo Bland's Case.

The Supreme Court has affirmed the decision of the Chilton Circuit Court, in the case of Alonzo Bland, who, at the last Fall term of the latter court, was sentenced to the penitentiary for life, on a trial for murder in the first degree. Following are the head notes of the decision of the Supreme Court in the case:

STONE, J.

1. In the order setting a day for the trial, and ordering the summoons of a special venire by the sheriff, the court in this case followed the statute (Code sec. 4874), as judicially construed in the case of Floyd v. the State (55 Ala. 61) and Posey v. State, at the present term.

2. When the order for the summons of a special jury in a capital case is recited in the minute entry, it is unnecessary that it shall be again set out in the judgment-entry of the trial and conviction; and if it is correct, as set out in the former, an error in its repetition in the latter is not ground of reversal.

3. A charge asked in a criminal case, instructing the jury that, to authorize a conviction on circumstantial evidence, "the evidence should be as strong as the positive testimony of one credible witness, who proved, beyond a reasonable doubt the guilt of the defendant," does not assert a correct test as to the sufficiency of the evidence, and is properly refused.

4. Under an indictment for murder the defendant may be convicted of murder in the first or second degree; and where all the evidence in the case is not set out in the bill of exceptions, this court cannot say that the court below erred in refusing to instruct the jury, on the request of the defendant, that they must acquit him unless they were convinced he was guilty of murder in the first degree.

Affirmed.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

In the eighteenth century the growth of population in Denmark was so small as to be scarcely noticeable. During the present century the population has increased from one million to nearly two.

There are more than 1,800 people in the employ of the Government by the name of Smith, more than 900 by the name of Jones and more than 600 by the name of Johnson. There are between 300 and 400 John Smiths.

Gen. Lew Wallace, U. S. Minister to Turkey, who is just home from Constantinople on a visit, declares that the Turkish women are the most beautiful in the world. He won't except American women only as a matter of patriotism.

The new Transcaspian region acquired by Russia contains 200,000 inhabitants, and is 3,609 square versts in extent, one verst being equal to two-thirds of a square mile. This territory reaches the Afghan frontier at a point 40 miles distant from Herat.

A youthful appearing couple have been detected in a strange conspiracy to obtain money. They visited different cities as single persons, obtained positions in society, courted each other and were married. In every case the wedding presents amounted to handsome amounts.

The blacksmiths of Pesth, Austria, have struck. They are required to work 14 hours a day and half time on Sundays, for which they receive $2.50 a week. They ask for 12 hours a day work with their Sundays free, and $2.80 a week. Their employers laugh at these exorbitant demands.

A midnight marauder put the contents of a hen house into a bag at Altoo, Mich., and was surprised next day, on dumping the fowls for sale at a market, to see that they consisted of two three-legged hens, a double-headed duck and a nearly headless goose. He had taken the stock of a traveling museum.

The Hebrew population of St. Louis is in a state of agitation because one of their number, a fashionable hatter, has been refused a lease of a house in a genteel neighborhood, on account of a clause in leases already granted that no Jewish family shall be allowed to occupy any house in the row.

Scientific young ladies who in the funny columns of the newspapers during the past one hundred years have promised their sweethearts that they would marry them when the Washington monument should be finished are beginning to look around now for some convenient loophole of escape.—Boston Globe.

Every saloon in Des Moines, Iowa, has closed and no liquor is obtainable under any pretext. News from all parts of the State show that the new Prohibition law will be obeyed, unless at some river points. Saloon keepers generally are either removing their stocks to other States or embarking in other business.

When a Wisconsin farmer was a small boy his father put him into a half orphan asylum, though not compelled by poverty to do so. He lately retaliated by sending his paupered parent to a poor house, though abundantly able to take care of him. The case is being considered by the church to which the revengeful son belongs.

Laborers in Mexico fare hard. Thirty cents a day is the common rate of wages, and for that the natives are content to perform the heaviest labor. Farm work, mining, factory labor and domestic service are all alike paid low. The custom of making loans to laborers to be repaid by work is common, and tends materially to prevent their social advancement.

Two Ways of Doing a Thing.

An express train filled with listless, sleepy-looking passengers stood in the Pennsylvania railroad station, on the moment of departure for Philadelphia. The locomotive had backed up to the cars and poured a volume of thick smoke into the hot, stifling atmosphere of the station. The travelers lolled in their seats, looking as though they dreaded the discomforts of the long, dusty ride, but yet were impatient to be whirling through the open country, away from the smoke, the smell, and the noise. A slow-moving, surly-looking boy of 14 or thereabouts, passed through the train, calling out:

"Pea-nuts, 5 cents."

He spoke in a dreary, disconsolate tone, which made the people feel more tired and languid than ever. He went from the smoking car to the rear of the train and sold just two fans.

A colored boy, about the same age, followed immediately after him, with a big armful of new bamboo fans. The difference in the two lads was striking. The darky had a cheery, business-like way with him that appealed directly to the comfort and to the pockets of the perspiring passengers. In a peculiar boyish voice, as mellow as a flute, he called out:

"Keep yo'selves c-o-o-o-l, now, ladies an' gemmen! C-o-ney Island breezes! A big fan only 5 cents! Zephyrs from de billows! Buy 'em while you can!"

The effect was like a draught of cool air. Everybody at once wanted a fan. The darky was as much in demand as the newsboy on an early train from the suburbs. People left their seats to avoid getting left. In two cars the boy sold 67 fans. He could have sold as many more if he had them. He jumped off the platform as the train moved from the station with his pocket full of change and his heart full of joy. "Golly!" he shouted, "dat was quick business." The other boy stared in stupid astonishment and wondered how it was done.

Not very long ago tomatoes were known as love apples, and were regarded as poisonous. Last season the amazing statistics-mongers of the United States put an $8,000,000 coin of tomatoes.

Tobacco seems to be tenacious of life. A few years ago an order was issued by the Russian Government that all the tobacco plants in the country should be destroyed, and the order was carried out to the letter. Now the Russian Government has a monopoly of the tobacco trade, and is selling the weed at a profit of 1,000 per cent.

THE TICHBORNE CASE.

Approximating Release of the Claimant on a Ticket-of-Leave.

The Tichborne claimant is to be released from prison on a ticket-of-leave.

Roger Charles Tichborne, a child born January 5, 1829, of an ancient English Catholic family, was, after his father, heir to the title and estates of his uncle, Sir Edward Doughty. He is known to have arrived at Valparaiso on June 19, 1853, and having crossed the continent eastward April 20, 1854, he sailed from Rio for New York on the Bella, which was lost at sea. His father succeeded to the baronetcy March 5, 1856 and died June 11, 1862.

It then passed to the second son, Alfred (Roger being presumed to be lost), who died February 22, 1866, and was succeeded by his posthumous son, Sir Henry Tichborne, born May 26 in that year. In 1865 Sir James's widow, hoping Roger might yet be alive, had advertised for him in the English and Australian papers. In 1865 her advertisement was answered by one Thomas Castro, a butcher at Wagga Wagga, Australia, who pretended to be her son, who asserted that he had been saved from the wreck of the Bella. After some correspondence with Lady Tichborne, Castro sailed for England, where he arrived December 25, 1866.

In January, 1867, he joined her at Paris and was accepted by her as a son, though most of the other members of the family repudiated him. In March he filed a bill against the trustees of the estate and, having been occupied in the interim in obtaining witnesses and testimony, brought the action for the recovery of the estates, valued at $24,000 a year, to trial May 11, 1868. Lady Tichborne had died March 12, 1871, still believing Castro to be her son. The trial lasted at one session 103 days, and, with adjournments, till March 6, 1872, when the jurors declared themselves convinced that the claimant was not Sir Roger, and he was nonsuited.

The principal points against him were his ignorance of French, which language the true Sir Roger spoke admirably, and of incidents happening during his sojourns in France; the dissimilarity of the handwritings of the two men; their marked physical differences; the claimant's neglect while in Australia to avail himself of the large balances at Sir Roger's credit, though he was pressed for money, and his own action in seeking out immediately on his return to England the Ortons, a family of rather humble life, to whom he presented himself and sent his photograph as Arthur Orton. The claimant was indicted for perjury as "Thomas Castro, otherwise Arthur Orton," put on trial April 23, 1873, and after a trial of 188 days' duration, convicted February 28, 1874, and sentenced by Sir Alexander Cockburn to fourteen years' penal servitude.

Life In Madagascar.

In this land, where superstition, treachery and murder predominate, it is not strange that funerals are continually occurring, and that the strangest and most revolting performances are indulged in upon these occasions. The first funeral which I witnessed was that of a man of no particular rank or position. As the corpse was being carried along it was followed by a rabble of mourners who were all screaming and yelling. At intervals along the road the corpse was placed on the ground and a series of athletic games were commenced, in which spear exercises was the most prominent. When the place of burial was reached the corpse was thrown naked into a shallow grave and then covered up with earth. A large pile of rocks was then placed over the grave. Some pieces of silver and a few other articles were buried with the body in order to give the ghost a start in the next world. When people of rank are buried the ceremony is more extensive and somewhat different. At the death of a chief the greater part of his cattle are killed, and his wives are obliged to cut off their hair and otherwise disfigure themselves. A coffin is made by cutting a log somewhat longer than the corpse. This log is split lengthwise, hollowed out, and the body placed within. The funeral ceremonies are never complete until the succeeding chief has captured a town or has fought a battle in which blood has been shed. Whenever a great sorcerer, or person of more than ordinary distinction departs this life, his body is allowed to decompose before burial. It is covered with aromatic substances and placed on a bamboo platform in the sun, where it is left for several days. The decomposition produces a putrefying liquid which is caught in earthen vessels placed under the platform. This horrible liquid is then divided among those present. Each receives the liquid in his hand and quickly rubs it all over his body. After this revolting performance the body is wrapped in a kind of cloth and buried with various ceremonies.

The Oleomargarine Law.

The first decision under the Oleomargarine law was rendered in Brooklyn by Justice Walsh. Patrick H. McGann was arraigned on a charge of making and selling eight pounds of oleomargarine. His counsel contended that the statute was unconstitutional. Justice Walsh sustained the law and fined the defendant one hundred dollars—the minimum penalty prescribed by the act. This is intended as a test case, the complaint against McGann being a friendly one. The decision given has little significance. The important question involved can be finally settled only by the Court of Appeals, where this case is to be carried. We shall not be surprised if that tribunal sets aside the law as unwarranted legislation.—New York Herald.

A Calcutta paper tells of a railway station agent in India who recently sent the following dispatch to headquarters: "Train just due. Tiger jumping about the platform. Please telegraph orders."

THREE TIMES IN ONE STORM.

Destruction of the Cattle by Heat Likewise Never Strikes Twice in the Same Place.

A letter from Bath, N. Y., says: The farm house of Henry Axtell is in the town of Cattin, Chemung county, two miles from Pine Valley station. In the sitting room was a large base-burner stove, the pipe from which ran up through the ceiling into another apartment, where it entered the chimney. While the terrible thunder storm of Saturday was at its height Mr. Axtell and several members of his family were in the sitting room, some of them sitting close to the stove. Suddenly the room was filled with a blinding light. The stove flew into a hundred pieces about the room, breaking windows, walls, and furniture. None of the flying fragments struck any of the inmates of the room, nor were any of them prostrated by the shock.

Lightning had struck the chimney, nearly every brick on half of which was reduced to dust. The other half of the chimney remained standing. The fluid had followed the stove pipe in the chimney above, dividing it into four sections, each one of which was split into halves. After demolishing the stove in the sitting room the bolt had torn four holes in the carpet and set it on fire. From the carpet it entered the partition wall back of where the stove had stood, slid down to the base board, and tore it away for a distance of five feet. It then passed down into the cellar, where it struck a crock of butter. The crock was broken into countless fragments and the butter spattered over all parts of the cellar, some pieces being found sticking to the ceiling.

A table on which several pans of milk were standing had all four of its legs taken off close, and every leg was torn into splinters, which were found in all parts of the cellar. There was not a mark on any part of the table top. Under the table an old chair without any back was standing. The legs of the table must have been cut off simultaneously, for the top was found resting on the chair, and only a small quantity of the milk was spilled, but the milk was all turned thick and sour.

What became of the eccentric fluid after it had done its work in the cellar could not be learned, as there was no mark to be seen where it had entered the ground.

The inmates were still running about the house in excitement when another bolt struck the building. A neighbor says he saw a streak of fire run from the chimney down one side of the roof and down the side of the house and disappear in the ground. A track of missing shingles and clapboards and a hole in the ground marked its course. It also took with it a portion of the remnant of the chimney. A few minutes later the fragment of chimney still left standing was demolished by a third stroke of lightning. The fluid from this passed down to the eave trough, which it followed to the end of the roof, from which it jumped to the corner of a woodhouse, tearing off a part of the roof, and passing down through the floor, and into the ground. No fire resulted from either stroke, and no serious shock was felt by any one in the house.

Another singular freak of lightning is reported from Hornellsville. Abram Ford saw a bolt strike the chimney of John Regan's house on Hartshorn street during the storm of Saturday. The bricks were thrown in all directions for around. All the other evidence of the presence of the electric current about the house was a round hole in the bottom of a tin basin which stood in the sink in the kitchen. Around the edge of the hole was a black rim of an equal width of a quarter of an inch, having the appearance of being burned in the tin.

A Dashing French General.

THE MAN WHO CAPTURED BACNINH SO QUICKLY AS TO ASTONISH HIS COMMANDER.

Maolein is the Annamite word for "quickly." And that is the name the French soldiers have given to Gen. Negrier, who is at present looked upon as the most wideawake General in the French army. He commanded one of the brigades in the Tonquin expedition, and it was he who captured Bacninh. The commander-in-chief, General Millot, came after him, much surprised to find the place already taken. Before that Negrier had sent three officers to report the fact to headquarters, but they did not succeed in reaching Millot's brigade. Uneasy at not hearing any news from Gen. Negrier, Gen. Millot sent Capt. de Vignacourt in the direction of Bacninh. On coming close to the place he found a flag flying over one of the forts, but the fog was so thick that he could not see what flag it was. Turning in another direction he came upon another fort, and was surprised to find that the soldiers did not fire upon him. He advanced and found that they were French troops. He politely asked them if they would be good enough to inform him where he could find Gen. Negrier.

"At Bacninh," was the reply. "He slept last night in the royal pagoda."

Vignacourt rode rapidly back, and arrived at Gen. Millot's headquarters just as the officers were finishing their breakfast.

"Bacninh is taken," he cried, "Gen. Negrier has been there since yesterday evening."

Gen. Millot was astonished, and the correspondent of the Temps says that some of the officers expressed dissatisfaction because Negrier did not wait for them to share the honor of taking the place. They said as much to Gen. Millot, to whom they wished to give their sympathy for being late, but the General replied that he was delighted.

Negrier is described as a man whose face denotes great energy. He has splendid eyes and a nose like the beak of an eagle. His beard is thick and bushy, the color being a strange mixture of black and red. He is young considering, and has the air of a General of the olden times.

THE LUXURY OF GRIEF.

The Misery Spent by the Poor on Funerals—The Desire to Outdo One's Neighbors.

In one of the most crowded tenement-house districts a funeral was in progress a day or two ago, when a reporter for the New York Express passed by. Twenty-four coaches, a hearse and a florist's wagon stood near at hand. From the last-named vehicle men were busy carrying various floral devices into the house. The thousand windows that lined the street on either side were full of heads, and the heads were full of eyes. Thinking some one of local celebrity at least was about to be carried to his long home, the reporter approached the undertaker, who stood in the doorway, and asked:

"Was the deceased a ward politician, or is this a society funeral?"

"Neither. It is a private affair, and the dead man was only a plumber's helper."

"But these broken columns, these floral pillows and harps, this numerous assemblage of coaches—surely they are—"

"The luxuries of grief," said the undertaker interrupting. "It is the poor man that has the largest funeral. It is what he lives for. He goes with plain clothes, eats coarse food, and lives in crowded tenements, all that he may have a large show when he dies. The importance of a certain class of people in this city is measured by their ability to bury their dead relations in style. Here is a case for instance. I do not suppose the dead man ever earned more than $3 a day, while his funeral will cost $250. I do not like to charge so much, but if I don't do it some one else will."

"Then big funerals, costly ones, I mean, are a common thing among the poor?"

"Very, especially the poor Irish and Italians. They want the best make of coffins. Only solid silver plates will do for some of them, while in the matter of coaches they must have one for every family they have ever known. I have furnished funerals for parties for which I have had to charge $250, when I knew the people were so poor that they never had meat more than once a week. They desire to eclipse their neighbors in show. If one person comes to me and I furnish him fifteen coaches, his neighbor will not be content with less than twenty, and so it goes. The poor laborer and mechanic is the best customer the florist and undertaker has. They always want a big show and pay cash for what they get. I remember going over to the Almshouse on the Island one day, and among the inmates was an old woman who came and spoke to me. She called me by name and seemed to know me very well, so I asked her how she knew me and what her name was. Imagine my surprise when she told me I had buried her son less than three months before that time. But it was true, and for that son's funeral, she had paid out nearly $500, and yet, here she was a pauper. Priests have committed to their trust immense sums for burial purposes, by people so poor that they cannot buy coal except by the pail. It's strange and sad, but still for all that it's true."

With an expenditure of less than $90,000,000 a year Germany can put in the field, in ten days, 2,000,000 trained soldiers. England, at the same time spends more than $80,000,000 on the 500,000 men who compose her army, two-thirds of whom are militia and volunteers, who were lately described by Lord Wolseley as being no better than "men with muskets."

The Hot Car Stove.

"Fly! how hot it is!" exclaimed a flashy lady as, entering the car her eyes fell upon the stove. "What an idea! A fire such a day as this! What in the world are they thinking of?" And she shoves up the window and fans herself like all possessed.

An elderly gentleman next enters. He sits down to read his newspaper, first glancing at the open window in an offended sort of way. As his eyes move around from the window to his paper, they fall upon the stove.

"Great Scott!" he mutters. "Do they want to roast a fellow alive?" and up goes his window.

Each new comer sits down quietly, looks at the stove and then cries, "How hot it is!" "What an awful fire they've got!" "Isn't it ridiculous!" or something of the kind; and each opens a window, one gentleman going so far as to open all the ventilators, while another opens both doors.

"Conductor!" cry a dozen voices, as that official makes his appearance, and a dozen forefingers point to the stove.

The conductor looks at the cause of all the commotion, its miss window glowing like a furnace seven times hotter than it is wont to be heated. He takes off his hat and mops his brow. Then he takes a long poker, and, standing as far away from the stove as possible, throws open the door. He falls back to avoid the heat, then steps forward, looks into the empty cylinder, and remarks, with a laugh:

"Sold, by mighty! That boy's gone and painted them winders red!"

Instantly the doors are closed, every window comes down with a bang, and a little man in the end seat asks the conductor if he won't please shut the ventilators.—Boston Transcript.

"Your beau seems to be an intelligent-looking youth, Mary," said a fond Somerville papa to his blooming daughter.

"Oh, yes," she replied, with a smile; "he is the 'short-stop' of the Bottom nine."

"Ah, indeed; but he is not much of a player, I reckon."

"Why do you think so?"

"Because he stays till midnight nearly every time he comes to see you. As a 'short-stop' I should be inclined to regard him as a failure."—Somerville Journal.

A peculiar circumstance in the history of the First Baptist Church, of Mystic, Conn., the oldest church of that denomination in that State, is that during the 187 years of its existence the pastor has always been a member of the Wightman family. Rev. Valentine Wightman, the first pastor, served forty-two years. He was a descendant of Rev. Edward Wightman, who was burned at the stake during one of the religious outbreaks in New England.

THE COUNTRY SCHOOLHOUSE.

The schoolhouse stood beside the way,
A shabby building, old and gray,
With rattling sash and loose hung door,
And rough, uneven walls and floor;
And why the little homespun crew
It gathered were some way more blest
Than others, you would scarce have guessed;
It is a secret known to few.

I'll tell it you. The high road lay
Stretched all along the township hill,
Whence the broad lands sloped either way;
And smiling up did strive to fill
At every window, every door,
The schoolhouse with that gracious lore
That God's fair world would fain instill.

So softly, quietly it came,
The children never knew its name;
Its various unobtrusive looks,
They counted not as study books;
And yet they could not lift an eye
From play or labor dreamily,
And not find writ in sweetest speech,
The tender lessons it would teach:
"Be gentle, children, brave and true,
And know the great God loveth you."

Only the teacher, wise of heart,
Divined the landscape's bless ed art;
And when she felt the lag and stir
Of the young idlers fretting her,
Out-glancing o'er the meadows wide,
The rustling woods, the far hillside,
She drew fresh breaths of God's free grace,
A gentler look came in her face,
Her kindly voice caught in its own
An echo of that pleasant tone
In which the great world sang its song—
"Be cheerful, patient, still and strong."

M. E. BENNETT.

STORY OF A BANK CHECK.

What I have to tell is absolutely true. It did happen exactly as I shall try to write it. The only thing I will omit are the names of the persons and the place where it happened. I might by lengthening out the story show the play of those fell passions, greed and covetousness, but I trust what I have to say will not lose its point from brevity. The moral is the same old trite one, that honesty is the best policy. When a man is tempted to commit a wicked action it often happens that the injury done another becomes irreparable. There is a sequence in all dishonest transactions which escapes the evil-doer. Effect follows cause. This may come instantly, as quickly as an explosion when the hammer of the gun-lock strikes the cap containing the fulminate, or the fire may hang back, but it will come some day or other. This is a longer preamble than I thought would be drawn from my pen, but as I am not a young man I may indulge in some comments, because in the life of any one who has passed the half century the force of the inevitable constantly occurs to him. A man of my age has been long enough in this world to have seen passing before him many a sad drama; he has been present at the very first scene, and has been an unwilling witness of the terrible conclusion.

I suppose few people who have had direct transactions with banks are not aware that errors sometimes happen. The heads of firms rarely are acquainted with such mistakes. It is the business of clerks who have the checks cashed to see that the amounts paid them are correct. Paying Tellers if they do err are rather likely to pay too much than too little. Should they give more money than the face of the check calls for, if the receiver of the money is dishonest, then the payer does not always hear about it. If he underpays, the demand for the difference is invariably made at once. I am rather inclined to repeat the assertion that in such mistakes as are made in the rush of business it is the commoner error to pay too much. Sometimes a very tired man, whose brain has been too long on the stretch, or who is ill or nervous, mistakes the number of the check for the amount, and pays away some thousands instead of hundreds. I have known this to happen in a New York bank to a young friend of mine. He had sufficient good judgment not to embarrass the Paying Teller by making any noise about it. He resumed his place in the line, handed back his bank book, politely requested the Teller to look at the check he had presented, the amount he had received, and it was all so quietly done that he made for life a fast friend of a careful and expert bank Teller. I have two or three times been overpaid by a bank Teller. People who shop have very often mistakes made in their change to their advantage. Need it be said that without waiting an instant restitution should be made?

I was a clerk in a house when the incident I am about telling happened. We did a large business in the city of ——, and our check-book was in constant demand. I made out the checks and kept the bank account, but did not have the signature of the firm. Generally for greater security, when the amounts were large, I drew out the money myself. A great many of the transactions we were engaged in required us to pay at once the individual the hard cash.

The Paying Teller of our bank in the business season had all he could attend to. The money to be paid for an agricultural product very much in demand would on some days make the cash disbursements of this bank amount to $750,000. I remembered that on one occasion, looking at the Teller, he seemed tired and depressed. Presenting my check for some amount less than $1,000—wanted by me in five and ten dollar bills—he overpaid me $50. He had counted the money over twice before passing it to me. I recounted the money, found the error, and being pressed for time could not return the $50 until after 3 o'clock. The Teller was obliged to me, but I noticed that he bore a worried look. A month after this we had some balance to pay a customer living out of the city, amounting to $450. A check was drawn by me, handed to the creditor, and his account was balanced. The business entirely dropped out of my mind.

Some three months afterward the firm received a letter from this man which was rather ambiguous of its kind. There was an error, so he said, in his account. Would we look it over? At once I examined the books, checked off every item, went through all the debts and credits of his business, and ended by inspecting the final check paid him. My employers, who were very honest and careful gentlemen, were satisfied with the accuracy of the account, and I was instructed to write him a letter to that effect. I did so, as politely as I could, but at the conclusion of my letter I said, "You leave us in the dark, however, as to one thing. Three months have elapsed since our check was given to you. If you had not been paid what was due you we should have certainly heard from you before. Have you been overpaid?" My senior employer a shrewd business man, looking over my letter, remarked, "Perhaps your questions here might not be liked by Mr. ——. However, let it go." I mailed the letter. We heard nothing more about it for a month. Then there came a tortuous letter from the man. "His account was wrong," he wrote. "Maybe he had come across some money he could not exactly account for." He did not state how much money it was, or how it happened. It was a mean shamble on his part. I knew that. He had pricks of conscience; that I was certain of. The firm consulted with me what they should do. I made up my mind that more money had been paid the man on the check than he was entitled to. I went at once to the Teller of the bank. I found him ill, nervous, and tremulous.

"Yes," he said, "my actions were wrong. There had never been a big deficit. I have not slept for months. I am afraid I have overpaid some one. But thank God I made it up. I mortgaged my house and passed the amount, short, to the credit of the bank. I must have made a blunder somewhere. But the strain on my mind has been killing me. I feel as if I were no longer fit for the place." He seemed to me to have moments of doubt and uncertainty. "I still cling to my place," he said. "Of course I have no recollection of having paid that check of $456." I said to him "that I had hopes of getting some of the money back," but I did not like to tell him how. But what I did do was to go that evening to the President of the bank and state the case to him. As it had been through him that I owed my position in the firm he had every confidence in me. My advice was asked. I was forced to declare that I thought the Paying Teller had better been given another and lighter position. Next day when I went to the bank, the old Teller had been apparently relieved. He was casting up some accounts in the ledger. When I spoke to him across the railing he did not seem to recognize me. Next day I was shocked to learn, through the President of the bank, that such positive indications of mental trouble had been shown by the Teller, that his friends had thought it wiser to confine him in his house. His accounts had been at once rigorously examined, and were found to be correct. It was perfectly true that he had mortgaged his house, and had paid the amount received into the bank. He had concealed the loss for three months or more from the bank, which was a mistake on his part, but he had been punctilious enough to even add the interest for some 90 days.

Now, I felt absolutely certain that the man to whom the check had been paid must be a rascal. If he had offered restitution it came late—very much too late. My firm gave me carte blanche to manage the matter as I pleased, I could not have him arrested. As he lived in an isolated part of the country, no efficient summons could reach him. If I had been aggressive before probably not a cent would have been returned. I wrote now, a sharp letter. I said: "That a very large amount of money must have been paid him over and above the face of the last check given him, which was for $456." I stated, "that I knew exactly how much it was." I must confess outright that this was a bluff. I was not sure that the Teller had not made other mistakes besides this one. I wrote "that unless the money was at once restored I would blast his reputation. If he was inclined to be honest, even at this late date, let him do all he could and send back the whole amount." I thought it wiser not to let him know the mental condition of the Teller. I was quite certain that if he knew that the Teller was out of his mind not one penny would be return. I wrote to him "that he must be in a hurry about it. That only the Teller and I knew of it, and that my firm were as yet in ignorance."

At once, by return mail, I had a letter. The sum was sent, as he said, what I supposed it to be. He made some specious arguments about a man finding a purse, and the description of it not tallying with the actual purse lost, or the amount in it. Under such circumstances, was a man bound to return it? If I could prove that he had been overpaid, I ought to state exactly what was the amount. He might, he added, "never have written me a word about it, and no one would have been the wiser. But he had a conscience," so he said. I replied with a vigorous letter. I confuted his arguments. "He knew," I said, "the moment he had the bank-notes passed over to him that he had been overpaid." A man might find a piece of gold in the dust of the road, and could never tell who dropped it there. But there was no analogy between the two cases. I cried "for immediate restoration, or there would be an exposure." His answer did not come for ten days. "I was mistaken," he said. "He was not aware that he had been overpaid until he got home. Then he did not know of it for a week afterward. It came out then in his accounts." I knew this to be a wicked lie, but it contained at least the written acknowledgement that he had been overpaid. His letter concluded as follows: "The matter has worried me considerably; has taken up a great deal of my time, and time for me is money. Don't you think there should be compensation allowed me, or in other words, can't we make a compromise?" (Oh, the blackguard!) "If such a thing could be arranged I will come to the city and pay over to you the money. I am not afraid of the bank. I consider that my transactions have been with your firm."

The money overpaid by the Teller had been some $4,000, and he had probably counted out $4,560 instead of $456. I hated to do it, but I offered the scoundrel his traveling expenses. His reply came promptly: "To leave his business was worth a great deal more than that. Then, again, he thought of bringing his wife on with him and enjoying themselves." The up and down of it was that I must offer him a certain amount. "My temptations, you remember, have been very great." I offered him $500. I was disgusted. I felt like going to his place and tackling him myself. "This is my ultimatum," I said. "If I do not hear from you in ten days I will disclose the whole matter and you will be dishonored." His letter came back promptly enough.

"He would take the $500. It wasn't very much. The bank was ever so rich. Corporations had no souls." I consulted with the bank president, who thought it better to close with the man. Would it be believed that that wretch and his wife came to —— apparently on a pleasure trip? He had done a sharp and a clever piece of business. He had not the least compunctions of conscience. He came to the office of an evening, and I do not hesitate in saying that in my hip pocket there was a revolver. He handed me over something less than $2,000, asserting that the amount received less the traveling expenses and the $500 made up this balance. When the money had been transferred by me to the safe I gave him a piece of my mind. I did not spare him. I heaped on him every insulting epithet I could think of. Then he showed his temper, which was an ugly one. "Now," said I, (remember I was 26 then and hotter blood ran through my veins than to-day), "you are worse than a thief; you are a murderer. You have wrecked an honest man's brains. That teller of the bank whose money you took has lost his reason. He will, I'm afraid, never be a sane man again. This is your work." That seemed to cow him. "Your repentance comes too late. I hate you so that —God forgive me—had you as much as lifted a finger against me I should not have hesitated in killing you like a dog, and no jury in the land would have touched a hair of my head. Go out of this city by the early morning train or I will make you." That wretch left the office like a whipped cur. What was the sequel? A sad one. The bank teller lapsed into a melancholic condition, which rendered all mental labor impossible. He had some little money but many friends and such few comforts as he required were ungrudgingly given him. He died ten years ago. He never did completely recover his senses. As to the cunting rascal, his fate was a dire one. Somehow the whole story came out, though I did not divulge it. In that section of country where he lived he was discredited. He took to drink and became a confirmed inebriate. He neglected his business and his plantation was sold. His wife sought and obtained a divorce. Two years ago I read that in a brawl in the most degraded quarter of a town in Alabama this man met his death in a negro dance house.

A Rapid Traveler.

"My son," said an economical father, "an express train attains great speed. Lightning is proverbial for its rapidity, comets are supposed to hurl themselves through space at the rate of millions of miles a day, but, comparatively speaking, all these things are snails, my boy, all snails."

"Why, father," replied the young man, lazily puffing a twenty-five cent cigar, "what can possibly go faster than lightning?"

"A five-dollar bill after it is once broken, my son."

MARRIAGE NOW AND THEN.

ILLUSTRATING HOW AN ENGAGEMENT WAS CONSIDERED.

Some Modern Ideas Contrasted With Those of Bygone Times.

"The thing can't come off," said a young girl loudly in a crowded room, lately, "until after Lent. It's not the style at all to think of anything in Lent but prayers and church. But it will come off on Easter Monday. That is if my dresses are finished in time. It all depends on that."

It was not a journey or a ball that she was talking of, but her marriage; the most solemn crisis of a woman's life, the time when all her truth and tenderness, all her trust in God, and love for the home she is leaving, come to light, if ever.

"Well, I declare," she continued, "the whole thing's a horrid bore, and so I tell Jem. Since our engagement was announced, I can't accept an invitation without him; he has to hang around the house all the time, or all the gossips tongues will be wagging. I'm just marrying him to get rid of him. He'll have to attend to business when he has me to keep!

"Then here are eight bridesmaids, all fighting about their bonnets and the color of their flowers, and I have to settle it all! And Susy Jackson got three hundred wedding presents, and that means three hundred letters of thanks to write! She wrote sixty-odd the morning she was married, and was completely fagged out. Then there are all the duplicates to exchange afterward. Oh, I tell you, getting married is a big job, and a horrid bore!"

Perhaps not many young girls would talk as freely or as coarsely as this one, but how many of them regard marriage from precisely the same point of view? It is a matter of presents, of bridesmaids, of gowns, a stately show at church, and somebody to pay their bills afterward.

The recent unveiling of Chief Justice Marshall's statue in Washington brought forth a pretty, tender story of the great jurist's courtship of a Virginia girl while she was scarcely more than a child, in her father's home. How jealously the sacred secret of "the engagement" was guarded while she was being educated and fitted for her position as wife and mother. How grandparents and sisters and cousin each brought their simple gift, with hearts full of love and blessing for her; how she went at last, shy, tender, blushing, from her mother's arms to her husband, and was cherished by him, with a chivalry of devotion, for more than fifty years. When God called her, the vacancy in his life was more than he could bear, and he soon followed her into that higher life where they cannot be parted.

Marriage comes into almost every woman's life, and every woman naturally and rightly looks forward to it as the fulfillment of her highest work in the world. But how is she to look forward to it? There are two ways, the old and the new.

Which will she choose?

A Son's Awful Discovery.

SIX FATHER'S VESSEL SUNK AND ALL HIS DEAR ONES LOST.

While a party of men were fishing off the banks of Cape May a few days ago, they saw the masts of a vessel protruding above the waves. They rowed over to inspect the wreck, when Harry Williams cried out: "My God! boys, that is father's schooner. I know her by the crosstree that we fixed with the block to reef the halyards through before she started on her last voyage. God help them, they are all lost!" And the young man fell fainting in the boat.

The schooner was the Deborah Diverdy, owned in Dennisville, and commanded by Captain Frank Williams. On his last trip Captain Williams had with him his wife, two sons, John and Frank, a steward and his wife, and two deckhands whose names are unknown. The vessel is thought to have left Boston about four weeks ago, and since then nothing has been heard of her. It is thought that the schooner must have sprung a leak, and the soft coal with which she was loaded absorbing the water rapidly, she must have sunk before any of the eight persons on board had time to save themselves.

A Paying Enterprise.

"Do you think you could get the stock of my railroad listed?" asked a sharp-nosed man of a prudent operator.

"What is your road?" inquired the operator.

"It isn't built yet, and I haven't any name for it, but it's a good thing."

"Where are your surveys? Where does it start from and where does it stop?"

"Haven't got any surveys and don't want any; but when that road is built it will run from a college regatta to a baseball match, making signal stops at the race-track and laying over at a sparring exhibition. Want to touch it?"

And the prudent operator let a gross of opportunities pass by while he and the sharp-nosed man examined the plans and specifications.—Travelers' Magazine.

New Discoveries in Africa.

The Methodist Episcopal Church recently appointed the Rev. William Taylor Missionary Bishop for Africa. His friends in Boston gave him a farewell reception recently and in the course of his remarks the Bishop said:

"It is reported that a most extraordinary discovery has recently been made in Africa. There have been found nations of people hitherto unknown, who live in houses built of stone, with gardens in the rear, and properly laid out streets, who work in iron, copper and ivory, and are pretty well up in the industrial arts, many of them being well to do. This is a country never heard of before. Our plan is to strike for these people, and we hope to make the scheme self-supporting when we get there. We ought not to go out there with less than twenty men."

The district referred to by Bishop Taylor lies south of the Congo, between 5 degrees and 6 degrees 30 minutes S. latitude and 21 degrees and 25 degrees E. longitude. It has been visited only by Dr. Pogge and Lieut. Wissmann, who passed through the country in 1882. Dr Pogge, after living about nine months among the three tribes who inhabited the district, died early this year when on his way home. Wissmann returned to Germany last year with wonderful stories of what he had seen, and with fine specimens of native weapons, carved ivory, baskets, inlaid wares, and copper and iron utensils.

He reported the country to be a fertile, well-watered, and densely populated plain. "We were struck," he says, "by the numbers of the Tushilange tribe, who flocked around us by thousands." The neighboring Basonges were even more numerous, and Wissmann speaks of them as "friendly, laborious, and highly skilled in all kinds of industrial art." Specimens of their handiwork comprised the larger part of his collections. But the most remarkable people the explorers met were the Beneki tribe, whose kingdom comprises the eastern part of the district. "Their villages," says Wissmann, "are models, well built, and clean. The houses are surrounded by gardens and palm trees. They are an agricultural people, very numerous, and well to do. It took us four or five hours to march through some of the villages, which had one, two, and three rows of houses or streets. The population must number hundreds of thousands."

In this district Bishop Taylor proposes to plant his Methodist missions. He will not find the country difficult of access. The Kassi River, the largest affluent of the Congo, bounds it on the west, and the Lubilash, another wide and deep river tributary to the Congo, divides it into nearly equal portions. Lieut. Wissmann has returned to the Congo to lead an expedition up the Kassi to the country he explored, and the Germans, if they secure the harbor of Angra Pequena on the southwest coast, intend to build a road connecting it with the discoveries of Pogge and Wissmann.

If Bishop Taylor expects to civilize the negro by missionary efforts alone, he will doubtless fail, as many others have done. Only those missionaries who give the natives instruction in the industrial arts and create in them a desire for better clothing, houses, and food are accomplishing anything for civilization. The purely religious fruits of their labors are very small, but they are the only workers who are reaping any fruits at all.

A Poor Circulation.

Newspaper men are very sensitive. Not concerning their dress, their piety, or ability to pay a debt, but of their circulation. There is Colonel Harquies, for instance. He rather likes personal abuse, and, upon his private life, severe criticism has no more effect than an autumn drizzle falling on the back of a hard-shell turtle; but you must not hint that his paper does not carry in its hip pocket a wad of great influence. Several days ago the colonel was taken violently ill. He raged in the delirium of high fever, and his wife, becoming alarmed, sent for two prominent physicians. When the medical gentlemen arrived, the editor was wallowing in a tragic dose. One of the physicians approaching, took hold of the colonel's arm, and turning to his companion, said: "Circulation very poor." "What!" exclaimed the editor, springing up, "poor circulation! Why, confound you, I work sixty quires. Get away from here, you scoundrels," and with loud imprecations and demonstrations of violence he drove the medical gentlemen from the room. —Arkansaw Traveler.

SUMMARY IMPORTANT.—Statistics of the industrial progress of the South for the first half of 1884 show that in fourteen States nearly $70,000,000 have been invested in manufactures in the six months ending June 30. The largest amount in any single State is $13,840,000 in Alabama, and Kentucky comes next with $13,497,000. The industries cover the entire range of ordinary manufactories, cotton mills and woolen mills being most conspicuous in the list.

The only time Courtney will ever be married is during leap year. He will never make a match if one help it.

HENRY CLAY'S HORSES.

The Sorrel Stallion the Kentucky Statesman Won at Poker.

"I recollect Henry Clay's turnout very well," said an old resident of Washington. "He had one of the old-style Concord buggies, with a top that suggested a Mother Hubbard bonnet. It was evidently a second-hand affair that Mr. Clay had picked up in a trade, and nowadays would do very well for an old woman to haul vegetables around town in.

"The cushions were stuffed with moss, and so well worn you could see the moss sticking out at the sides. I'll bet Henry Clay didn't know what a lap-robe was, and as for a whip he didn't have any. He used to slash his old sorrel stallion with the ends of the reins so loud you could hear it a block off. The steps of the buggy were gone, and Mr. Clay used to jump over the wheels. When he wanted to get in he put one foot on the hub and swung the other 'round over the wheels and dashboard. The wheels were so high he had to let the top down to get out. They had axlegrease in those days, but Mr. Clay had evidently never found it out. He always drove his horse at a canter, and you could hear the wheels of his buggy squeaking as many notes as there are on the picolo.

"Ah, well do I remember that sorrel stallion," continued the old-timer. "Henry Clay won him one night at poker in John Hancock's saloon. He was well known around Washington for several years. He always nickered when Clay came near him. Clay carried a pocketful of shelled corn, and he gave the horse a handful every time he got into the buggy. The boys knew the stallion well, and they used to give him pieces of bread, cake, nuts, or anything of the sort. He'd eat watermelon and I've seen him eat wads of paper, as though he was trying to make the boys laugh. Well, sir, Clay had a nigger named Sam. One day he loaned the stallion to drive to drive to Alexandria. Sam got drunk before he left town, and he started out on a gallop. He didn't stop till he got to Mount Vernon, twenty miles off. Then he turned around and galloped all the way back. The old stallion dropped dead at the edge of South Washington. There were over 100 boys at the funeral. In revenge Clay sold the nigger to a Louisana sugar planter, with a proviso in the bill of sale that the planter should hitch Sam in the shafts and work him in a cane mill. Fact, sir!"

PEPPERMINT ADVANCING.

One of the Results of the Alarm About the Cholera Epidemic in Europe.

"Peppermint has undoubtedly gone up in price," said a wholesale dealer in that commodity. "It is worth from 40 to 50 cents more a pound than it was a month ago, which is undoubtedly due to the belief that it will be needed in Europe on account of cholera. The old crop is nearly exhausted, and is almost all in the hands of four or five persons, and the new will not reach us till about the first of September. As soon as the cholera appeared in Toulon there began to be an active call for peppermint, and most other essential oils, which, in solution, will be used by those who are attacked.

"Peppermint is grown in low, marshy districts, chiefly in the western part of New York State and in Michigan. Wayne county, N. Y., is the centre where the distilling is chiefly done. The entire crop is, perhaps, 30,000 pounds, worth $3 a pound. An acre will grow from eight to fifteen pounds. There are no large farms entirely devoted to this product, but it is cultivated in small quantities by a great many farmers. It is used both as a medicine and as flavoring in confectionery. When used for the former purpose it is diluted with alcohol and water, and is then known as essence of peppermint. It is sometimes adulterated with castor oil and oil of turpentine; but its most common adulterant is oil of pennyroyal, which is now worth only $1.50 a pound. Peppermint will stand 25 per cent. of this; but even in using only 10 per cent. there is a decided profit to the dishonest mixer. You cannot deceive the maker of confectionery. He must have his oil pure, and gets it so. Adulteration in this form is easy of detection. In an unmixed condition the oil is not dangerous, but is very powerful."

A New Counterfeit.

The secret service division of the Treasury Department has received advices that a new counterfeit $10 silver certificate has appeared in the West. It is supposed to have been printed from a woodcut, but is likely to deceive an ordinary judge of money. It is of the series of 1880, G. W. Schofield, register; James Gilfillan, treasurer. The note is one-quarter of an inch shorter than the genuine; the paper is composed of two thin layers, with the silk parallel lines and fibre placed between them. In the story on the back where it should read "And all public dues and when so received" the word "all" is entirely omitted, and the words "when so" are tied together as one word. There are numerous other defects which judges of paper money will readily discover.

THE HUMOROUS PAPERS.

WHAT WE FIND IN THEM TO SMILE OVER THIS WEEK.

HOW TO REMOVE SPOTS.

An Austin youth, whose income is not quite as extensive as that of Vanderbilt's, got a large ink spot on his coat. He asked a friend how the stain could be removed.

"You can get a chemical preparation for twenty-five cents. Just soak the spot with it, and it will come out."

"I guess I had better soak the whole coat. I can get four dollars by soaking the coat."—Texas Siftings.

AN IRREFUTABLE ARGUMENT.

Mrs. Blank—"I want some money for Chinese lanterns, ice-cream, lemonade, cake and other refreshments."

Mr. Blank—"Great Cæsar! Do you think I'm a Vanderbilt? What do you want all that for?"

"I am going to give a lawn party."

"A lawn party! Why, we haven't any lawn."

"We have a little back yard."

"But it is paved with brick, except where you have beds of flowers and shrubbery."

"Well, the place where you spend your evenings drinking beer and listening to a ramshackle piano is paved with brick, too, and hasn't a flower or a twig in it, and yet you call it a 'garden.' Guess our back yard will do for a lawn."

Mr. Blank shelled out.—Philadelphia Call.

THE FOX AND THE PULLET.

A Fat Pullet, who set out to see the country despite the Solemn Warnings of her Aged Mother that some calamity would soon happen, soon encountered a Fox. Reynard's attitude soon convinced her that he meant Business, and the Frightened Pullet cried out:

"Please don't! Remember that I am young and have had no Experience!"

"Exactly!" grinned Reynard. "If you were an old Hen I should be Foolish to expect Chicken for Dinner!"

MORAL:

If we were all Experienced the gambler and confidence man would have hard luck.—Detroit Free Press.

VALUABLE INSTRUCTION.

"Papa," asked a little boy, "a man who steals a loaf of bread is a thief, isn't he?"

"Yes, a dastardly thief."

"Is a man who steals $10,000 a thief, too?"

"Well, no, my boy, scarcely. Defaulter, I think, is the more appropriate word."

"And what is he called when he steals a million dollars?"

"There is no such thing as stealing a million dollars, my son. It is termed 'diverting.' When a gentleman diverts a million dollars he is spoken of as a financier."—N. Y. Sun.

IN SEARCH OF INFORMATION.

"Mamma, is decoration something good to drink?"

"Why, child, of course not. What makes you ask such a ridiculous question?"

"'Cause I heard pa say, 'Uncle Tom, let's decorate,' and they went out."

"Well, how did you know they had been drinking?"

"'Cause when they came back pa kissed me, and his breath smelled like the stuff you put in mince pies."—Sunday Republic.

IN THE SAME LINE OF BUSINESS.

A Banana Skin lay on the grocer's floor. "What are you doing there?" asked the Scales, peeking over the edge of the counter.

"Oh, I'm lying in wait for the grocer."

"Pshaw!" said the Scales; "I've been doing that for years."—Chicago News.

A GOTHAM MAGISTRATE'S COURT.

Magistrate — What's the charge against this man?

Officer—Creating a disturbance.

Magistrate—What did he do?

Officer—Please, your Honor, he yelled so loud he woke up all the babies in the block.

Magistrate—When was it he yelled?

Officer—Right after I commenced to club him, your Honor.

Magistrate — Disgraceful! perfectly disgraceful! Ninety days.—Phila. Bve. Call.

THE INVENTION OF ACCIDENTS.

"The world owes its greatest achievement to accidents," remarked Colonel Swiffle to his wife as they sat on the back gallery enjoying a cold breeze. "Nearly all great discoveries were purely accidental, and Mrs. Swiffle," added the colonel, "it was by mere chance that we met."

"Yes," the lady replied, "it was an accident that caused our marriage."

The colonel didn't very much like this reply, and with elevated eyebrows rejoined:

"Accident? Why, my dear, I don't understand you. What do you mean?"

"Oh, I mean that if Tom Bowers had not accidently shot himself, I would never have married you. It was useless for me to think that you could love me by accident, but don't want to think it was accident that caused me to marry you. Wish you'd throw a little light on the subject."—Arkansaw Traveler.

CHILTON VIEW.

Published Every Thursday Morning.

CLANTON, ALA., AUG. 28, 1884.

Gen. Pope Walker died at his home in Huntsville, Ala., on last Friday. Gen. Walker was Secretary of War for the Confederacy in Jeff. Davis's Cabinet.

Gen. Cleveland's short term of public service in civil affairs turns out, by comparison, to have been longer than that of Abraham Lincoln, Ulysses S. Grant or Samuel J. Tilden, before their first election to the presidency.

The Cullman Progress says: "There were 423 newly registered voters at the late election, all white. This will run up the voting strength of the county to fifteen hundred. The best part of it is there is not a negro in the county, and dont you forget it there never will be."

An Eufaula young lady who has been spending some weeks at Verbena, Ala., a summer resort of some note, made an extraordinary run in a game of ten pins the other day, scoring 140 out of a possible 150. This makes her the champion of the State. The young lady is Miss Eliza Ricks.—Advertiser.

Blaine began his political career a poor young man, and at the end of twenty years, during which time he has held office, he is worth three or four millions. In the language of our neighbor, Col. Kaufman, "Blaine has done first rate," —yes, tolerably well, considering his chances.

Georgia has the oldest officer of any State in the union. Mr. N. C. Barnett was renominated for secretary of state a few days ago. He was first chosen to the position in 1842, and except during a short period during reconstruction days, has filled it ever since. Although ninety years old, no one appeared at the recent state convention to oppose him, and he will be chosen for another term at the next election.

Benjamin Franklin left $5,000 to Boston to be loaned in small sums to young married mechanics under 25 who had served an apprenticeship, had good character, and could give bonds for the repayment of the money in annual instalments. The changed condition of mechanics, the decay of the apprentice system, and other causes have made the bequest of no value to those for whom it was intended under the rules Franklin laid down. The fund now amounts to more than $200,000, and is increasing at the rate of $10,000 a year.

The editor of the Gadsden Times has hit upon a new plan for collecting subscriptions. He says: "We will soon offer for sale a large list of unpaid subscription accounts due the Times, ranging in amount, from 25 cents to $10.00. This list contains the names of several hundred persons, whose subscriptions have expired, and who ought to have paid up long since, but have failed to do so. The aggregate amounts to several hundred dollars, and we are desirous of disposing of them at some price."

Respectable ladies have been arrested on the streets for wearing the Mother Hubbard costume in Omaha, Neb., Des Moines, Burlington, Keokuk and Davenport, Ia., Kansas City, St. Joe, Sedalia, and Hannibal, Mo., Springfield, Jacksonville, Bloomington, Quincy, Decatur, and Mattoon, Ill. In all of these towns and cities the arrests were made by authority of the mayors and chiefs of police. This spasm of sham morality will be short lived. Mayors and chiefs of police are mere straws when the whirlwind of public ridicule strikes them.

There is not a parallel, but rather a contrast between the Vice-Presidential candidates of the two parties. Hendricks is a man of great ability, of high culture, of large experience in public affairs, and of unquestionable capacity and eminent fitness for the office for which he has been nominated. Logan is a man of ordinary ability, of limited culture, a political turncoat and a ruffian both in manners and morals. He would, if elected, be the weakest and most incompetent man that ever filled the Vice-Presidential chair and if unfortunately, he should succeed to the Presidency, he would cut as ridiculous a figure as a monkey perched on the summit of the Alps.—Ex.

The largest cotton plantation in Alabama is said to be that of Messrs. Roberts & Salter, near Union Springs. These two young men have, in the last four years, cleared over 900 acres of land and dug twenty-five miles of ditches. Work on the plantation is regulated with military precision, and the "hands" go to and return from labor at the sound of a bell. The small army of laborers and their families on the farm, numbering some 300 souls, are comfortably housed and are apparently well contented. Each family has its garden apart and raises pigs, chickens, etc. Although cotton is the principal crop a large amount of corn is raised for food. Actual experiment shows that this crop can be raised at a cost of ten cents a bushel. It is estimated that the yield this year will be 900 bales of cotton and 95,000 bushels of corn, the former worth $40,500 and the latter $21,250—total, $61,750. The cost of making these crops is put at $28,000, which leaves a profit of $33,750. The number of regular laborers employed is 392, and there are 159 mules and horses and sixty-five farm wagons.

Cleveland's Slanderer.

Rev. George H. Hall, pastor of a church in Buffalo, wrote the slanderous article concerning Mr. Cleveland's private life, now in circulation, and published it anonymously in a petty and characterless paper in that town. Fearing that his work would not have a wide circulation, he wrote to various other preachers editing religious weeklies, reciting the allegations concerning which he claimed to have personal information. These letters, it appears were intended to be confidential. They were really intended to blacken the reputation of the Democratic candidate. One of the weeklies, edited by a Mr. West, published these charges—only one we are pleased to note—but the editor forgot to omit the writer's name. The charges were given out over the signature of Rev. George H. Hall, and in that way have been telegraphed from Maine to California. Having found their way back to Buffalo, a newspaper reporter handed a printed copy of the letter to Rev. Mr. Hall, and asked him if he knew of the truth of the allegations therein made. Did he say instantly that he did, and that he was prepared to substantiate all that he had written? No, he did not. He turned pale, acknowledged he had written the letter, but declared: "It was strictly confidential, and I am surprised that it should appear in print." He was then informed that he had said in the letter to Rev. Mr. West that he had made a personal investigation of the charges and knew them to be true, and was asked to what extent he had investigated them. In reply to this he was forced to admit that he knew nothing personally of the matters set forth, and had made no investigation, unless a conversation with one or two people who knew no more than he did could be called investigation.—Mobile Register.

AN ENGLISH ATHEIST.

After Facts Regarding a Death Which Took Place in a Church.

Birmingham Age.]

Dr. T. N. Anglin has received the following letter from C. Bradlaugh, of England, who occupies the same position in his country as Bob Ingersoll does in this country.

20 CIRCUS ROADS,
ST. JULIEN'S WARD, LONDON,
July 30, 1884.

Dr. T. N. Anglin: It is stated in England upon good authority that a Dr. A. R. Jones died suddenly at a prayer meeting recently in Gainsville, I shall be obliged by you informing me the exact date of the death, the exact address where it took place and the name either from the person from whom you obtain your information or of some persons present at the time of the death. I should be glad also to know whether any local newspaper reported the event, and if yes, the date and name of such paper.

Yours obediently,
C. BRADLAUGH.

The following special appeared in the Daily Age of October 28, 1882:

JONESBORO, Oct. 27.—Dr. A. R. Jones, a prominent physician in this place, fell dead suddenly tonight while delivering a prayer at the young men's prayer meeting held at the Methodist church, a mile and a half from here. He was pronounced dead by another physician present five minutes after he fell. He died of apoplexy at 8 o'clock.

It was reported at the time that Dr. Jones was an infidel, and intended to make a prayer addressed to the "Unknown and unknowable God." It was by his request that he was called upon to pray.

We can add to the above that the editor of this paper was intimate with Dr. Jones, while the latter was practicing his profession in Birmingham in 1880. We know him to be an atheist. He would often talk at length upon his disbelief.

The Needed Change.

In all our efforts to put before the people of the State our ideas on the need for a change in the system now employed in our management of our convicts, we have carefully avoided saying a word that would affect the interests of any man or corporation now using convict labor. We have urged a change in the system and not a cancelling of any contract. Any confusion in the matter is annoying. For several weeks the Chronicle has urged the importance of a complete change in the system. It has given reason after reason, and will continue to lay the matter before the people hoping before the legislature is again to be elected, to have in the State an enlightened public opinion, to deal with it. We have had enough politics in the State. We have it all our way and instead of making war on imaginary foes, the time has come for some serious legislation.

The next legislature when it assembles at Montgomery is expected to do something more than waste time on local option laws and other bills of a private nature. Not a half dozen bills should be passed which do not apply to the whole State.

The body will be intelligent enough to deal with the matter as well as with the tax rate, the United States Senatorship, the road laws and all other matters of general interest to be brought before it.

While we consider the convict question first in general importance we are willing to aid the advocates of the other measures to have all attended to in the short session before us.—Birmingham Chronicle.

Penitentiary Convict in a Pulpit.

Preston Barber, colored, stole a horse from Mr. R. W. Sharp in 1875, was sent to the penitentiary for two years, served his term out and returned to Montgomery. He then stole a horse and sold him in Greenville, for which he was sent to the penitentiary for six years. He served nearly two years and escaped in '79 and has been at large since. A night or two since he was discovered by Policemen Payne, LaPrade and Hailes Taylor preaching in a church near the Western railway. They waited until he had finished his sermon and arrested him. He has been sent to Comer & McCurdy.—Advertiser.

A Remarkable Man.

Decatur News.]

Mr. John Holmes who lives in Lawrence Cove, Morgan county, is a wonderful man in many particulars. He is now in the 76th year of his natural life, weighs 298 pounds, is less than six feet high. He has been a "great hunter" and has killed, since his first drive, even 1,500 deer. His posterity numbers just 100 souls. Mr. Holmes is a strict member of the Baptist church, and unflinching Democrat. Of course he is an esteemed and upright citizen. He is well preserved and for one carrying so much avoirdupois, is active and elastic. Has any other county in Alabama his equal in the particulars mentioned?

To Kill the Taste for Alcohol.

There are many drinkers who can break up the habit for a time, and who would gladly refrain from ever touching it again, but an uncontrolable thirst for the beverage attacks them and never lets up until they give way. A prominent gentleman in Richmond, Va., tells us how he broke this up.

"I was one of these unfortunates given to strong drink. When I left off I felt a horrid want of something I must have or go distracted. I could neither eat, work or sleep. Explaining my affliction to a man of much education and experience, he advised me to take a decoction of ground quassia, a half ounce steeped in a pint of vinegar, and to put about a small teaspoonful of it in a little water, and to drink it down every time the liquor thirst came on me violently. I found it satisfied the cravings, and it gave a feeling of stimulus and strength. I continued this cure and persevered until the thirst was conquered. For two years I have not tasted liquor, and I have no desire for it. Lately, to try my strength, I have handled and smelt whiskey, but I have no temptation to take it. I give this for the consideration of the unfortunate, several of whom I know have recovered by the means which I no longer require.

Ben Butler's letter accepting the nominations of the Greenback and Anti-Monopolist parties is the richest batch of the slush of demagogueism that has probably ever been presented to the people of this country. Like Ben, its originality, grand parade of pompous and eccentric expressions and ideas, is beyond compare. Ben says he hopes to do something for the people before he dies, the very correct impression remaining that he has heretofore spent his public life in working for railroad sharks, salary-grabbers and monopolists. Very few people will be fooled by his buncombe, though it fills up six columns of small type.

A new illustrated Democratic paper has been started in New York city, by "Brick" Pomeroy.

LOCAL DOTTINGS.

A tournament is being talked of in Clanton.

Farmers complaining of a poor cotton crop.

The business outlook for next season is encouraging.

Mr. Wm. Wright's residence has been neatly painted.

Four jail birds in the county boarding house, all colored.

Mr. W. M. Wilson is making an addition to his store house.

See notice of dissolution of copartnership of Wells & Carter.

Mr. R. E. R. Hicks, of Childersburg, visited Clanton this week.

Read the advertisement of Dr. M. J. Greene's new cash drug store.

Sheriff Smitherman will, at an early day, remove his family to Clanton.

Miss Bettie Anderson, of Jemison, visited friends at Clanton during the past week.

The Congressional Convention for this district will meet at Verbena next Wednesday.

Mr. W. B. Strock, of Verbena, was in Clanton on Tuesday and gave the VIEW a pleasant call.

Miss Bell, of Alpine, Talladega county, has been visiting Miss Gusta Evans at Clanton.

The Fall term of Chilton circuit court will begin on the last Monday in September, the 29th day.

Mr. O. A. Duke has purchased a building site in Clanton. He will build a residence and move his family here.

Mr. W. H Burton is Sheriff Smitherman's deputy. With such a team evil-doers will have to make themselves scarce.

Slaton & McGlathery, the Birmingham machinery men, sell you only the very best machinery and their terms are easy.

A protracted meeting will commence at the Clanton Baptist Church on Saturday before the third Sabbath in September.

Married, in this county, on the 24th inst., at the residence of Mr. J. Bice, by Rev. W. G. Riggins, Mr. William Vines and Miss Blendena Bussey.

Mrs. George T. Burch calls attention in a notice this week to her school at Verbena. She solicits a share of public patronage. She is a competent and accomplished teacher.

A new church building has just been completed by the Cane Creek Church. Rev. James A. Mullins is pastor of this church. The church is situated six miles from Clanton on the Adams' Ferry road.

Dr. I. D. Lanier has disposed of his drug business to Dr. M. J. Greene, of Talladega. Dr. Lanier thinks of removing to North Alabama shortly. We will regret to lose him and his interesting family.

From Mr. J. R. Parnell, who was in Clanton Tuesday, it was learned that the citizens of the neighborhood of Benson are aroused over a third case of the raping of a white woman by a negro. The woman was a Mrs. Hayes. The negro escaped. A number of citizens were in close pursuit and Mr. Parnell says that he is certain that there will be one negro less in the world if the fiend is captured.

Our Maplesville correspondent writes: "Weather dry; rain needed; cotton opening; fodder all pulled. Mr. Granison Smitherman is still very ill. Mr. Walter Lawrence, of Selma, is now at his father's for the summer."

As will be noticed from the advertisement, the time of the opening of Verbena Academy will be the 8th instead of the 10th of September. This is a fine school, and we are glad to know that its prospects for a large attendance during the next scholastic year are good.

Mr. Eli Barfield has the thanks of the entire Sentinel force for a delightful watermelon, presented on Monday last. He tells us a yarn about a wonderful squash vine he has, from which he says at least 500 squashes have been gathered, and anywhere from five hundred to one thousand still remain on the vine. This is in Chilton county.—Shelby Sentinel.

Death of Mr. Moses Simmons.

Mr. Moses Simmons died last night at the residence of his son-in-law, Mr. A. Schuessler. He lived in this city for many years, and had accumulated considerable property. He has resided at Clanton lately, and came here on Sunday last, hoping the change would benefit his failing health. He was about 75 years of age.—Advertiser, 22d.

A Card.

ED. VIEW:—We, the undersigned, wish to state through your paper, that the report which was circulated at Cooper's Station, on the day of the late election, that we had voted for a negro to represent Autauga county in the Legislature, is a falsehood.

W. B. STROCK,
K. WELLS.

From Cooper's.

MR. LAWRENCE:—On returning from home to my work on the Pratt Saw Mill railroad, I found the largest rattlesnake I ever saw. It appeared that it had been killed by a train passing. It was 4½ feet long, 2 inches across the head, 3½ inches across the body, and had 10 rattles and a button. I cut the rattles from the tail with my knife and will send them to you.

You can say in the VIEW that the Pratt Saw Mill railroad is in better condition than it has been in since the track was laid. W. P. P.

Mr. Jno. T. Wells leaves this week for Sherman, Tex. He goes there to accept the position of book keeper in a cotton warehouse. Jno. is an excellent young man and we heartily recommend him to the citizens of Sherman or wherever he may cast his lot.

Mr. G. C. Gibson and family, of Morganville, are visiting his brother, Maj. J. C. Gibson.

Mrs. F. M. Billing has returned from her visit to New Orleans.

Mr. F. A. Gulledge's new store is rapidly nearing completion and if the present fine weather continues it will be ready for occupancy by the middle of September. It is a splendid building and adds much to the place.

The congressional convention meets here next Wednesday. The town will be crowded with delegates and visitors for a few days.

Mrs. J. T. Mullins, of Jemison, paid her friends and parents a short visit last week. We regret that she could not stay longer in our midst and hope that she will make us another visit in the near future.

The grandest ball of the season will be given at the Clifton House next Thursday night, September 4th. The music will be made by the best string band that Montgomery can offer and a good time is guaranteed to all who will attend. All of the followers of Terpsichore that read this notice are cordially invited to attend.

A gloom was thrown over our village last week by the death of Frank Davis, after suffering about ten days with fever he took a congestive chill and died last Thursday evening, the 21st. Mrs. Davis has many friends here who truly sympathize with her in this sad loss of her only son. MAX.

Build Up Your Home Paper.

If you are a farmer, subscribe for your home paper. If you are a merchant, advertise in it. The local paper is the mouthpiece of your town. If you wish your place to be populated, and its facilities, whatever they may be, developed, your own paper must represent you, and to do so properly it must have the benefit of your co-operation and influence. But merely subscribing for a paper and reading it is not enough. Influence sometimes goes farther than money. You should see that your neighbor does his duty in helping and encouraging those who help and benefit him.

Some one will stop right here and say, "I would be willing to take our local paper if there was anything in it, but it is a poor affair and not worth the subscription price."

Very well; what makes it so poor? What makes that cow so lean and hollow? There is nothing in her poor, emanciated body because nobody feeds her, and for the same reason there is nothing in a newspaper when nobody takes any pains to feed it.

Merchants should advertise in their own local paper, and they should do it in a lively spirited way.

A Splendid Offer.

The VIEW would remind its readers that it is offering as a premium to cash in advance subscribers one of the very best farm journals published in the United States, The Western Plowman. It is a sixteen page journal full of interesting and instructive reading for farmers, and will cost you nothing. Come in and subscribe for your home paper and get this fine journal FREE.

Those who cannot come to Clanton can send their names and money by mail or hand.

Tell your neighbor of this, and induce him to subscribe.

New Counterfeit Note.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 21.—The secret service division is in posession of a new counterfeit $10 note. The note is on the Third National Bank of Cincinnati, O., and made its appearance in that city Monday night. It is of the series of 1883, with a brown or chocolate colored back. The vignettes on the face of the note have a very coarse, scratchy appearance, but the back is well executed and calculated to deceive.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.

Are you disturbed at night and broken out of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup For Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflamation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children Teething is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price 25 cents a bottle. [mal

THE TERRIBLE DISEASE DISTRIBUTED BY PILGRIMS FROM SHIRDWAR AND HEDJAZ.

The Great Gatherings of these Pilgrims and the Manner in which They Live on These Great Occasions.

The only countries upon the globe to which cholera has not been carried are the islands of the South Pacific, Australasia, the Cape of Good Hope, the island of the North Atlantic, and the western coast of South America. These localities are all separated from India by a wide expanse of ocean, and have no commercial intercourse with that country.

Cholera has not become permanent outside of India, although it is seldom absent from some of the provinces of Hindostan. From its birthplace in the delta of the Ganges, the disease has effected a permanent lodgment in the provinces of Bengal, Madras, and Bombay, while in the provinces that lie to the west and northwest, such as Rajpootana and Punjab, it occurs only as an epidemic, developing after great religious gatherings.

Hurdwar, in the Punjab, at the foot of the Himalaya Mountains is the great nursery of cholera. It never originates there, but has annually been developed there during the great Hindoo festivals. Of these festivals Hurdwar is cursed with two, and they draw together a great concourse of people from every part of the Indian Empire. At some of these festivals as many as 3,000,000 devotees have assembled, but of late years the numbers have fallen off, Hurdwar having lost its sacred prestige from the fact that some of the holy waters of the Ganges have been profanely diverted into a canal constructed by English authorities.

There immense numbers of human beings gathered upon a bare, sandy plain on the banks of the Ganges, massed like herds of swine, without means of sanitary protection. The earth and air, as well as the water, are polluted, and the odor from the camps is perceptible for many miles. Day and night the devotees pour through the great thoroughfares of the country to and from the festival in parties of from 10 to 500, following so closely as to make an almost continuous procession. Ninety-five out of every 100 are on foot, but occasionally some great nabob sweeps past with an enormous retinue, or a rajah with his caravan of elephants, camels, horsemen and swordsmen passes in all the grandeur and confusion of Indian royalty. They ride over the poor wretches who line the roads, trample them down, and hurl imprecations upon them for blocking the way. Some march hundreds and some thousands of miles to engage in the festivals and to bathe in the sacred river. Many die on the way, and all arrive lame and gaunt from hunger and fatigue, with their feet bound up in rags and their scanty clothing covered with blood and dust. They rush into the river as soon as they arrive, and drink the water as fast as they can scoop it up in their hands.

They are fed from the Temple kitchen, where as many as 90,000 cooks are at work, and the food is distributed among them in a rude way. When fresh it is not unwholesome, but too much of it produces indigestion and great sufferings. The half-starved pilgrims eat it like gluttons, rush into the water again to bathe and drink, and the result is derangement of the digestive organs. When they have eaten their fill, whatever food is left is preserved. It is sacred and cannot be thrown away. Under the hot sun it soon becomes poisonous to the pilgrims who eat it.

In these hotbeds of disease, under conditions that would breed a plague anywhere, these pilgrims live. The heat is almost unendurable. The living, the sick and the dying are huddled together, with only just as much space as they can cover lying down. As fast as they die they are buried in the sand.

But on the return journey the misery of the pilgrim reaches its height. They are sick and lame, but stagger along until the weak fall by the roadside to die. The bodies lie thickly along the journey traversed. Some drag their weary limbs until they reach a village, where they drop and lie in masses, blocking up the streets, until they get strong enough to move forward, or die of starvation and disease.

It is impossible to calculate the number that perish. The Bishop of Calcutta estimates it at about one in five, and those who do not die on the journey carry the germs of the disease home with them, scattering pestilence along their path. Thus the cholera is started on its periodical march around the world.

No great Asiatic pestilence has ever ravaged the East and allowed the cities of Arabia to escape. The pilgrims to Mecca and the commercial caravans to Damascus carry death in their train under any quarantine that can be devised, but the attempts to establish quarantine are weak, ineffectual, and spasmodic.

The Holy City of Mecca is another great distributing point for cholera; in fact, it is a sort of clearing house for all sorts of infectious diseases. In 1865, it is said, 90,000 pilgrims died there of cholera in six days, and the city for centuries has been the focus of plagues, which have been brought from all directions, and thence distributed by returning pilgrims over three continents.

For many centuries there has been an incessant stream of pilgrims to and from Mecca. To be present at the Kourban Bairam is the great aim and end of Mohammedan life, and to reach there hundreds of thousands abandon homes and property, and undertake perilous and exhausting journeys. From the North Atlantic and Mediterranean shores of Africa, from Timbuctoo and Western Africa, from Siberia, from the Danube and the Sea of Azof, from the western provinces of China, from the cities of Europe, and from the most remote Mohammedan settlements, constant processions of pilgrims are passing to and from Mecca; for this pilgrimage, at least once in a lifetime, is binding on all true Mohammedans, and he who dies without having made it might as well have been a Jew, a Christian, or a dog.

The return of one pilgrimage is never accomplished from any of the larger settlements before another is on the move. They arrive in great caravans, and the misery and hardships they endure are equal to those suffered by the Hindu devotees. Some come by sea to Jedda upon the native vessels, which are saturated with infectious poisons. Each passenger receives only sufficient space to squat upon. The intense heat of the day, the miasmas of the night, privations of all sorts, the want of sleep and food and exercise induce a physical condition but little short of death. Many die on board the vessels, but the most have strength enough left to drag themselves to the Holy City. Those who go by land and on foot suffer even worse.

Having arrived at Mecca without rest or food, the pilgrims enter at once upon their religious duties. The first is to visit the Kaaba, the Holy Temple, and the tomb of Ishmael, upon which rests the stone let down from heaven. Upon the arrival at the Kaaba all drink and perform their ablutions in the well of Zem Zem.

The water is tepid, salty and milkish in color. It might have been pure once but it has not been so in centuries. No pilgrime ver quits Mecca without carrying a jar of this water away with him, and it is impossible to overestimate the potency of the Zem Zem spring in spreading cholera and other diseases.

In Mecca all the essentials for an epidemic are constantly gathered, as well as the means for distributing the germs of disease broadcast. The pilgrimages in India and Arabia have received the attention of sanitarians for several years, but no means has yet been found, so strong is the religious sense, to prevent the dissemination of disease by them.

The present epidemic in France can be traced from Hurdwar to Mecca, from Mecca to Egypt and thence along the Mediterranean to Toulon and Marseilles.

To Make Potato Salad.

A Minnesota lady wishes to know how to make potato salad. She will be sure to have a most appetizing dish if she does exactly as she is told. Peel and boil in salted water as many potatoes as will meet the requirement of your family. Suppose you have three quarts of boiled potatoes; they should be cut up while hot, in small pieces as nearly square as is consistent with the amount of time. A tablespoonful of finely chopped onion, a tablespoonful of finely chopped parsley, a tablespoonful each of black pepper and of salt. To this add a teacupful of the best salad oil, a half teacupful of vinegar. Do not stir the salad, as there is great danger of breaking the pieces of potatoes, and giving the dish an untidy look. Line a salad bowl or a vegetable dish with tender lettuce leaves, and then put the salad into the dish. In place of parsley tender stalks or very small leaves of celery may be used. If celery is used a teaspoonful of mustard should be added. Another substitution may be that of butter for oil; the butter should be melted very slowly, in a bowl set over the top of the teakettle; when it is melted drain it off leaving the salt in the bottom of the bowl. Another way to prepare potato salad is to make a cooked mayonnaise dressing and pour over the potatoes. The dressing should be cooked as you cook boiled custard; an excellent rule for this is: to the well beaten yolks of five eggs add five tablespoonfuls of vinegar, which you have heated to the boiling point. When you remove from the fire add three ounces of butter, season to your taste with salt, pepper and mustard. Cresses and endive are used with excellent effect in potato salads. It may not be quite clear to you how you can mix the various ingredients if you do not stir the salad; this may be done successfully by shaking the dish in which you prepare it, and by tossing lightly with a fork.

An Engine Driver's Talk.

"It was in my father's time, before I was a driver that this happened. An aunt of mine, a youngish woman then, was traveling by the G. W. R. ('Great Way Round' they used to call us) when a young man entered the carriage, where she was sitting alone, and asked where the train stopped first. This was (say) at Paddington. My aunt said 'Reading' was the first station and the train immediately started. 'Excuse me, ma'am,' said the gentleman, 'but will you oblige me by cutting my hair a little?' My aunt thought the man was mad, but being alarmed by his manner my aunt consented. Then the young man changed his coat, his collar, his waistcoat and tie. He put on a pair of spectacles, and when my aunt dared to look at him he was for all the world like a clergyman, an elderly gentleman in spectacles! 'Now,' said he, 'you must promise to be quiet, and never contradict me. If you do you will ruin it.' We my aunt—she was young then—promised, and before they reached Reading the train was stopped. A guard and a constable came up, and looked into every carriage. 'Have you the tickets, dear?' said the man to my aunt. 'All right, sir,' said the guard. 'We don't want to disturb you at all. We are looking for some one else.' The train went on, but the 'old' clergyman, as he seemed, left the train at Reading. He had committed forgery, but by disguising himself escaped. 'Clever rogue,' was he not?"—Little Folks' Magazine.

EMIGRATION.—Statistics published in Berlin give 80,164 as the number of Germans who emigrated, mostly to America, during the first five months of the present year. This number is 709 less than the number for the corresponding period in 1882. For the same period in 1881 the number was 162,844, and in 1881 it was 143,619.

Colonel Sketchly's Ostriches.

The latest reports from the experimental ostrich farm in California are favorable to the success of the enterprise. A recent visitor to the farm writes:

"These immense birds are kept in yards or inclosures, one male and two females occupying a place together. A common board fence, higher than the ordinary, surrounds each corral, and divides them. There is a space or open lane between the pens—a driveway for teams and to carry food to the birds. They eat a wagon-load of shells in one day, besides a large amount of coarse food, vegetables, alfalfa or clover-grass, etc. The cost of each is $1,000, and their weight is from 300 to 400 pounds. They lay 75 eggs each year, each egg valued at $100. Their feathers are plucked twice a year; they are on the tail and wings of the bird, the body being nearly bare. Each plucking averages $900. The eggs weigh two and a half pounds. The male is black, the tail and wing feathers being white, and the female a grayish white. It requires four strong men to hold one of these pets while plucking their plumes. It seems a cruel process, and no wonder the birds resist so hard. They are savage and dangerous if attacked, and can only be handled after a sack or stocking leg has been drawn over the head. They drive them into a corner, and slip as quietly as possible behind them to draw the covering on; some feathers are pulled out easily, others are cut, and one has to understand his business to prevent the bird from bleeding to death. They can not fly or jump, but can keep pace with the fleetest horses. When the eggs are to be gathered, a Chinaman is called into the arena. The ostrich seems to have taken a fierce dislike to the smile of the heathen Chinee, and is so taken up with his efforts to attack him that man slip in unnoticed and take possession of the eggs. The life of an ostrich extends beyond that of human beings, and averages 100 years. The plumes can be purchased singly by visitors, the price depending upon the length and thickness of them. They have to be afterward cleaned and dyed. No dogs or horses are allowed inside the inclosure, as the birds go wild at the sight of either. The Chinamen carry their food to them."

How a Rear-Admiral was Made.

One morning, when the Duke of Clarence, having received his commission and his ship, was on his way to his tailor's in Plymouth, to get the new uniform, at a street corner he saw a boy crying, and stopped to inquire the cause. The lad looked up through his tears, revealing a handsome, winning, and intelligent face, and replied that his mother had died only a few days before, and that he had been cast homeless into the streets. "Where is your father?" asked the Prince. "He was lost in the Sunsex, on the Cornwall coast, two years ago." "How would you like to go to sea in a first-rate man-of-war?" The boy's face brightened as he answered that he would like it very well. The Prince took out his pocketbook and wrote something upon a slip of paper, which he gave to the boy, with a shilling. "Go down to the docks," he said, "and with this shilling you will hire a boatman to carry you off to the Pegasus. When you get on board the ship you will give this paper to the officer whom you find in charge of the deck, and he will take care of you. Cheer up, my lad! Show me that you have a true heart, and you shall surely find a true friend." Arrived on board the Pegasus, the officer of the deck received him kindly, and sent him to sit upon a gun-carriage under the break of the poop. In less than an hour the Prince came off in his new uniform, and the boy was strangely moved upon discovering that the man who had promised to be his friend was none other than William, Duke of Clarence, and Captain of the frigate. The boy, whose name was Albert Doyer, was taken into the cabin, where the Prince questioned him, and forthwith he ordered him to be rated as a midshipman, and from his own purse he procured him an outfit. During the voyage to the American coast the Prince became strongly attached to his youthful protege, keeping him about his person continually, and instructing him in general branches of education, as well as in his profession. Time passed on and the boy grew to be a man, serving King and country faithfully. In time William became King, and signed the commission which made Albert Doyer a Rear-Admiral. He exclaimed, as he put his signature to the document: "There—if I have ever done a good deed for England, it was when I saved to her service that good and worthy man!"

OUR SANITARIUM.

Sunburn, Cool Drinks, Mosquito Stings and Hot Weather Hints.

A little sun-burn is good for the skin. When the skin has become thoroughly red, vaseline, cold-cream or milk should be put on the face and hands before retiring, and rubbed well into the pores. In the morning, wash in warm water and a very little white castile soap.

A salt-water bath, even if taken in the bath-tub at home, will prove beneficial to the health. For home use rock-salt is purchased and about three pounds of it put to one tub of water.

A cooling and healthy summer drink is made as follows: Take a teaspoonful of oatmeal and mix it with the juice of a lemon and two lumps of sugar; add cold water to the glass and drink after it has stood a few moments.

Americans drink too much ice-water, the settlement from the ice being what makes it unhealthy. The best way to cool water is to fill three or four bottles from the faucet and place them in the ice box, next to the ice. The water soon becomes deliciously cool and it is far more healthy to drink.

A little vinegar put into the water when washing this warm weather will make the skin feel delightfully cool.

Meat should only be eaten twice a day at this season. Fruits of all kinds, cereals and ices are far healthier and cheaper.

The sting from mosquito bites may be entirely removed by rubbing well with salt. If a sponge salt-water bath is taken before retiring it is said the mosquitoes will not come near, as they dislike the salt.

For feet swollen by the heat running water is the best remedy. The water should not be too cold or warm, and should run slowly over all the feet. They should then be dried with a soft towel and put on a chair for a time to let the blood recede.

The Elevated Masher.

In New York city Justice Duffy has just punished an Elevated Railroad Masher with a reprimand and a ten-dollar fine. In the course of a little lecture delivered by his honor from the bench on the Masher in general, and the Elevated type in particular, he pointed out the inherent tendency of the masculine person to become a Masher the moment he gets a uniform, cap and a brass button on. He could not explain it, but in common with the three hundred thousand who ride every day on the Elevated Roads he had remarked it with grief and wonder. The softer members of the soft sex, it seems, hang out of the windows along the routes of these roads waiting to be mashed by the men who wear uniforms. Thousands of other men, handsome, brave, gifted, travel on these roads and attempt the same thing, but fail. Nothing succeeds but the official brass buttons.

THE DISCOVERIES.—Up to this time the United States has been forced to depend for its supply of tin upon England and other foreign nations. This invaluable metal has recently been found in the Black Hills region of this country. There is enough of it in Dakota not only to supply this country, but the whole world for centuries to come. The tin in Dakota is richer and more easily mined than any other tin on the face of the globe.—Democrat's.

The Orange Tree.

The orange tree is the longest-lived fruit tree known. It is reputed to have obtained the age of 800 years, and it has been known to have flourished and borne fruit for more than 100 years. No fruit tree will grow and produce fruit so well under rough treatment. It commences to bear the third or fourth year after budding, and by the fifth year it will produce an abundant crop, but its yield will increase gradually under favorable circumstances, and as the years pass on it will become a very productive tree. The early growth of the orange is quite rapid, and by the tenth year it will have increased more than in the next fifty years, so far as its breadth and height are concerned; but its age multiplies its fruit stems greatly, and an old tree will sometimes bear several thousand oranges.

THE EMPEROR'S SECRET.—"I read yesterday," observed Biggs to his landlady as he strolled down stairs to a late breakfast, "that no matter whether the Emperor Napoleon rose at eight or at eleven o'clock he always found a chicken ready for him, hot and done to a turn."

"Ah!" replied the landlady without turning a hair, "I suppose Napoleon usually paid his board in advance, Mr. Biggs."

Loss of Flesh and Strength, with poor appetite, and perhaps slight cough in morning, or on first lying down at night, should be looked to in time. Persons afflicted with consumption are proverbially unconscious of their real state. Most cases commence with disordered liver, leading to bad digestion and imperfect assimilation of food—hence the emaciation, or wasting of the flesh. It is a form of scrofulous disease, and is curable by the use of that greatest of all blood-cleansing, anti-bilious and invigorating compounds, known as Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery."

THE FATHER'S HAND.

I'm only an old wife now, sir, and I've time to sit on the strand,
A-watching the boats come in, and the children at play on the sand;
Seventy years, sir—all my days—I have lived beside the sea,
And it has been meat and money and joy and sorrow to me!

Father and husband and boys, sir—there was not a man of them all
Could have lain still in the house, sir, when the winds and the waters call.
My father and husband sleep in the graves of our folk by the shore,
But both of the boys who left me—they never came back any more!

Oft I've been ready to sink, sir, but one thought would keep me afloat—
I learned it, sir, as a little lass at play in my father's boat.
(Do you know, sir, it's often struck me, the lesson of life is writ
Plain out in the world around us, if we'd but give our minds to it?)

My father hadn't a lad, sir, so he paid the more heed to me;
He would take me with him in summer, far out on the open sea,
And he'd let me handle the oars, sir, and pull with my might and main
But if I'd been left to myself, sir, I'd ne'er have seen home again!

"Pull, little maid!" he would cheer me, but still kept his hand on the oar;
Though sometimes I'd try to turn us to some pretty nook on the shore.
Still straight went the boat to the harbor, and as I grew stronger each day,
I found that the only wisdom was in rowing
my father's way.

And I think, sir, that God our Father keeps hold of the world just so,
We may strive and struggle our utmost, that we may stronger grow—Stronger and wiser and humbler, till at last we can understand
The beauty and peace of His keeping the oar of all life in His hand!

For the Father knows what we really want is labor and rest with Him!
So He bears us straight through joy and loss over discontent and whim;
Though oft it's not till we sit, like me, a-watching life's sinking sun,
We feel our best is our latest prayer, and that is "Thy will be done."

A GEORGIA WEDDING.

SOCIETY AND LIFE IN THE BACKWOODS—BETSY HAMILTON'S NEIGHBORS.

It had been whispered around that Jake Loftis had flirted Malindy Jane Trotman, and was a hitchin' of his ridin' nag up at our house; but they didn't know that when Jake's critter was a chawin' of our fence, Malindy Jane war inginnerly in the house.

The Trotmans is not the sort that sounds a horn and tells they business to everybody, and for that very reason some folks tries to find out ther affairs.

Malindy Jane she kep' her sowin' hid and never let none of the neighbor gals but me and Caledony see it, and Jake he got so he taken the nigh cut, and gin old Miss Freshours and old Arminty the dodge when he went to see her, and they sot it down that he had quit gwine, and that it was all busted up betwixt 'em, or, "Mebbe," says old Arminty, "atter all he hadn't never co'ted the gal."

But when the Trotmans let in to whitewashin' ther house and fence, and then let in on the trees around the house, they knowed in reason it meant a weddin'; but ther wasn't nothin' like findin' out for sartin. So Arminty tuk it on herself to go over thar and stay the live long day. She hinted and hinted, but all she gethered from Malindy Jane's maw was that the dock 'lowed lime was healthy.

Caledony was tellin' it at our house, and she 'lowed that when grammammy Eve was a leavin' so much cu'osity to ole Arminty she never forgot ole Miss Trotman. She left her sense enough to come ahead of her. They didn't only whitewash, but they scoured and fix up tel they didn't skasely know they own place, but Malindy Jane was the oniest gal the old folks had and she didn't git married every day.

To be sho if they'd had ther own sense about it, they never would have picked out Jake Loftis; but who in all the land could they have picked out for a husband for ther gal, Malindy Jane?

The day was sot, and she axed me and Caledony to wait on her. Cal she come over to our house and we all went together. She fetched her yaller buff muslin mine's off'n the same piece) and 'lowed me and her could fix and dress alike. So we wheeled in and starched our yellow buffs so stiff they'd stand alone, and ironed 'em slick enough to see your face in 'em, and we tuck the artificial off'n our last summer hats and stuck 'em whar the overskirt was tucked up to one side, and we tacked a row of cedar all around the bottom of the flesh and put a piece under our breastpins and a piece in our hair, and I wisht you could have saw us—I tell you we was firt. Aunt Nancy 'lowed: "Gals, for all you do, don't cutshine the bride."

Buddy, he hitched the steers in the waggin and sot in the cheers, and we all went, even to mew. We went soon so as to he'p Malindy Jane fix, and bless you when we got ther the house and yard was plum full. I won't be sartinbut, but I think that everybody that come fetched a baby and a bench-legged dog and a flop-eared hound. We'uns allers fastens "Old Scrounge" and "Trip," and never lets 'em foller.

After I fixt the artificials in the fashion on Malindy Jane's head and lent her my gole cabbin (it's good luck to marry in mump'n horrid), why I taken a peep in the eatin' room to see who all was thar, and behold! thar sot the Simmonses big as who but they, and I know in reason they wasn't axed nor wanted; and who should be hiked up on a bench all in a row, but them tore-down Freshours' chillum grand as you please, and still for the fust time in they lives, and their faces was rally so clean I didn't skasely know 'em. They had shorely been put to soak the night afore. Their skin was shiny and slick as a peeled ingon, and ther har plastered down tight with saff soap, and they looked plum satisfied.

Over in the corner sat the three old maids, Miss Bunch Beasley, Miss Patience Potter and ole Arminty Pendergrass. Miss Bunch is as broad as she's long, and as good as she's broad. Miss Patience is as long as a bean pole, and as good as she's long, and is funny enough to make a dog kill hisself a laughin'. She weers a short frock to try to make her look short, and all the colors of the rainbow to make her look young. Pap 'lows she looks like Joseph's coat. Ole Arminty was a settin' right side of 'em. Now thar was three old maids as different as the elephant and the monkey and the tiger. So folks needn't say old maids is all alike. And widders lacks a heap of bein' all alike too. The widder Comings was thar, and you wouldn't have knowed she was a widder. But the widder McAllister played fishin' for love, and put on a sight of airs. She tuck keer to let everybody know she picked the turkey and baked the tater custards and half-moon pies.

Jake he was the last one to come. He had his head dripping with lard and scented with cinnamon drops, and his new shoes was so tight he couldn't skasely walk. I wonder if a feller ever got married without havin' on tight boots or shoes?

Some town boys was out in the entry a gigglin'. Cal 'lowed if she'd a been Malindy Jane they shouldn't er been axed, one of 'em in pertickler, I disremember his name. She 'lowed he thought kase he lived in town that was all he needed. He had the enshorance to laugh at country boys with their home-made jeans, and all he was fitten fur was to wear fine Sunday clothes that wasn't paid for. He strutted around mighty bigoty, and smoked and chawed terbacker, and took his sweetened dram, tied his cravat in the fashion, pulled his moustache, and played with his watch-chain, and when he laughed at them boys he laughed at his betters. One good, honest, hard-workin' country boy like Iky Roberson, Cap Dewberry, or Jake Loftis is worth enough of his sort to build a fence from here to town.

Yes, everybody knowed when Jake got thar by the cinnamon drops. Brother Cole was axed marry 'em, and as many couples as he has joined he don't know his piece; he had to read it, and they helt a candle and dript the taller an inch thick on the po' old man's coat-sleeve, and then after all he came nigh marryin' 'em by the wrong names.

Caledony and Iky Roberson stood together, and I and Cap Dewberry, and when we tuck our stands, Malindy Jane she got on tother side of Jake, and Brother Cole he wiped his specks and sot in to readin' and spellin' out his words.

"The couple which now stands afore us for the occasion and benefit of being jined in wedlock, will please to jine their right hands."

Old Miss Patience Potter squeaked out in a loud whisper:

"Lindy Jane, you air on the wrong side of Jakey."

Then Brother Cole halt up his paper and read on:

"Will you, John Loftis——"

"Jacob, not John," says Miss Patience.

"Well, then, we'll proceed to continued. Will you, Jacob Loftis, take the 'oman, Malissy Ann——"

"Ma-lin-dy Jane," says Miss Patience a little louder. Then in a loud whisper: "For the lands sake don't get 'em married wrong."

"Well," says he, "fling on a piece of light 'ood, or hold me a torch, for I can't see."

Some of 'em grabbed a torch and helt it high. Then jist as fast as one word could foller tother, without stoppin' to git his breath, he went on:

"I pronounce you man and wife fur better or fur wusser salute your bride and if any present has any re-jections let 'em speak now or forever afterward hold ther tongues you're dismissed amen sir."

Then old man Trotman stepped out and 'lowed: "Git your pardners and go into ther house to supper; the ole 'oman's got a bite to eat in thar, and sitch as it is you're wylcome to it." So we locked arms and marched in to supper. The table was plum full, nothin' wasn't skace nor skimpy. The bride's cake was sot on a block of wood that was kivered over with letter paper sot in fringe to hang all around the edge of it. It had a thin whitewash over it, and was dressed off with little sprigs of cedar stuck in a row all around, and a long stick of pepperment candy stuck right straight up in the middle, and I tell you it sot the table off powerful. They had a taller candle at each end of the table and a pine light in the fireplace. After supper we sot in to playin' kissin' games. Ole brother Cole had done all he could—he had jined 'em in wedlock and he had et his supper.

The games was a gwine on, and all was a laughin' and havin' fun, some playin' "William with a trimbling toe," "Clap in and clap out," "All around the mulberry bush," and some was "Fishin' for love," when Brother Cole knocked for silence.

"Brethering and sistering," says he, "let us unite in pra'r and be dismist ar."

After he was gone Aunt Nancy 'lowed: "There are a time fur all things, and that ar prayer was very on-timely. Brother Hagin wouldn't have done sich a on-timely thing as that."

But they soon got to playin' and laughin' louder'n ever and havin' a power of fun, and all looked happy 'cept Miss Trotman. In case she was feelin' bad about Malindy Jane a marryin'. The women folks all had sump'n to say to her about it. Ole Arminty 'lowed in a religious tone: "Ah! I tell you, Miss Trotman, I hain't never married, and all of 'em can marry that's a mind to, but marryin' air a mighty solemn thing."

"Yes," says Miss Trotman, with tears in her eyes, "it's a soleman thing to marry."

"Yes," says Caledony, "but it's a heap more solemner not to marry."

"I bound for Cal," says pap.

And that sot 'em all to laughin'.—Betsy Hamilton, in Atlanta Constitution.

Formation of Comets.

Professor Young, of Princeton, N. J., (then of Dartmouth, N. H.,) was the first, in 1872, to obtain evidence of the actual ejection of matter from the sun's interior with velocities sufficing to carry such matter forever away from him; but the evidence was decisive, and since then kindred observations have been frequently made. What Young saw, indeed, was apparently the ascent of filaments of hydrogen, at an average rate of nearly two hundred miles per second; but it was easy to see that the irregular streaks of hydrogen were not themselves the ejected matter. If a thin gas like hydrogen could rush through the region immediately above the sun's visible surface at the rate of two hundred miles an hour—which I reject as incredible—the shape of such hydrogen missiles would be such as to indicate very clearly the resistance they were encountering. They would be pear-shaped, the rounded part of the pear in front, like fire-balls in our air. But these were irregular streaks, like the luminous tracks of meteors, and such doubtless they were. A flight of masses of considerable density must have been shot out on that occasion, and on other occasions when similar phenomena have been observed, and rushing through the hydrogen in the sun's neighborhood, caused the gas to glow along their track, just as fire-balls in air leave behind them long luminous trails. The rate at which these missiles advanced could be inferred from the rate at which the luminous trails followed them. Calculation, in which the sun's retarding action was taken duly into account, showed that the matter thus expelled from the sun left his surface at the rate of not less, probably, than 500 miles per second. The ejected matter left the sun, then never to return, and in the form of precisely such a flight of meteoric missiles as microscopic and researches had shown to be traveling through the interstellar spaces.—North American Review.

Dessert Dainties.

Strawberry ice is very refreshing at the close of a heavy dinner. Mash two quarts of strawberries, and add two pounds of sugar; mix well and let this stand for two hours. Strain the juice through a muslin, squeezing it well, so that nothing of value will be lost. Add an equal quantity of water to the juice and freeze. Some good authorities in fancy cookery advise the addition of the beaten whites of eggs; they should be used in the proportion of three eggs to one quart of juice and water, and should not be mixed with it until it begins to stiffen in the freezer. They should of course be faithfully stirred into it.

For pineapple water-ice take a large and thoroughly sound and ripe pineapple. Pare it and pick the flesh from the core with a fork, and pound it in a mortar. Press the pulp through a sieve, adding one pound of white sugar and one pint of water to a quart of the pulp, and then stirring in two tablespoonfuls of lemon juice. Now strain the mixture through a thickness of coarse muslin and freeze.

It Was Legitimate.

A traveler just from the South reports the following: On one of the Southern railroads there is a station called "Sawyer." Lately a newly-married couple boarded the train and were very loving, indeed. The brakeman noticed the gushing groom kiss the bride about 200 times, but maintained a serene quiet. Finally the station in question was reached, and just after the whistle sounded the groom gave the bride a rousing smack on the lips, and the brakeman opened the door and shouted: "Sawyer! Sawyer!" "What's that?" responded the groom, looking over his shoulder at the brakeman. "Sawyer! Sawyer!" "Well, I don't care if you did; she's my wife."

THE ARCTIC FIELD.

THE VALUE AND IMPORTANCE OF ARCTIC DISCOVERY FROM VARIOUS POINTS.

Further Efforts will be Unavailing but will Result in Fruitless Suffering and Loss of Life.

Judge Daly writes a letter on the heroic achievements of the Greely Exploring Expedition, in which he discusses incidentally the value and importance of Arctic discovery from the standpoint of common humanity as well as that of the geographer and man of science. He agrees with common people that further efforts to reach the north pole will be unavailing, and if persisted in will result in fruitless suffering and loss of life. The "open polar sea," he says, was shown to be an error and a delusion by the explorations of the Alert and Discovery in 1875-6. The experience of the sledging parties of this expedition proved by observations what science had already shown must necessarily exist north of the eighty-second parallel of latitude, viz., a frightful and impassable barrier of ice broken up in hummocks and tumbled into every conceivable shape, constituting an obstacle which the whole human race, if their united efforts were concentrated upon it, could not overcome. The limits of man's power over the globe which he inhabits are reached when he approaches this awful verge. Mountains he may dig down, rivers he may turn out of their course, deserts he may fertilize, gulfs he may fill up, but the icy pole he can never reach until the axis of the earth itself turns toward the sun. Astronomers tell us that this will come to pass somewhere in the illimitable future, and that as climatic conditions once existed which enabled the formation of coal in Greenland and the growth of the sequoia gigantea, the big trees of California, in the Arctic circle, so we may expect those conditions eventually to return. But for us who are now living the pole is inaccessible. It is hedged about with an impenetrable wall of frost. The utmost efforts of the explorers who leave their ships and take to sledges after pushing as far as ships can go, are only equal to a mile or two a day, accomplished by cutting narrow passes through interminable ice walls which speedily fill up with driving snow so that the very road opened with so much labor is lost on the return. And since provisions and fuel must be carried on the backs of men or dragged over the rough pathway the limit of such terrible labor is measured by the muscular strength of the individual and his power to resist the benumbing effects of cold. It is vastly creditable to Greely and his men that they penetrated a few miles further than the English Sledgers under Sir George Nares, but they discovered nothing except that the ice of 1882 was the same as that of 1876.

But it is possible, says Judge Daly, to add largely to our knowledge of the structure of the earth within the Arctic Circle without the sacrifice of life. "Continuous observations," he says, "around the polar basin, extending as far inward or toward the pole as favorable opportunities offer, are quite another matter, for we shall never accurately know the laws of aeriel and oceanic currents unless we know more than we do now about what takes place in the Arctic Circle, and this will not in my judgment be abandoned, notwithstanding the calamity that has befallen the present expedition. No loss of life has hitherto attended the establishment of the many governments which have preceded ours, nor, as the event has shown, would any have attended the one established by our Government had it been properly carried out and attended to by those who undertook the direction of it at Washington or to whom the command of the vessels sent out in 1882 was intrusted." This view is not opposed to the popular dread of Arctic discovery, which derives its strength from the tales of suffering and death so often reported on the return of the explorers in respect of which the Greely expedition seems to yield nothing by comparison with any which has gone before. The project of establishing fixed stations and providing them with the necessaries of life is reasonable enough if the men who go there can be kept to their appointed work and restrained from endeavors to outdo others in achieving the impossible.

A President's Message.

It was the habit of Sam Houston to deliver his messages to the Texas Congress orally. A few days before one of his inaugurals a member of Congress said to the President that the body would be better pleased if he would prepare written messages; that it would be treating them more respectfully to write them out, and, besides, they could then be preserved for future reference. Accordingly, on the day fixed for the inauguration he appeared with a large roll of paper in his hand and tied with a blue ribbon and marked in large letters "Inaugural." He addressed them with the roll in his hand, waving it gracefully that all might see it, and, concluding with a polite bow, handed it to the clerk and walked out of the chamber; when opened it proved to be only blank paper!

TWO ROMANCES OF BANDITTI.

A Robber Whose Daughter was at School in Europe—A Dashing Amazon.

Mexican brigands are waking up to the fact that their occupation is gone. Rapid travel lays bare lives and methods that distance and inaccessibility have hitherto enveloped in a veil of romance. Yet the old atmosphere still lingers protestingly about a few, which accounts for the fact that Churcho el Poto, the notorious bandit, who was captured at Queretaro the other day, was made prisoner, while the less famous ruffians were all shot. He has as many friends in Mexico as the James boys in Missouri, and has escaped the clutches of the law and baffled pursuit, until he won the title of "The Mysterious Man;" has been imprisoned in the past and made daring escapes, as he will probably do in the future. One of the secrets of his popularity is that his code of honor allows no Mexican to suffer at his hands; while he has robbed fortunes from unfortunate travelers, he has always spared his own countrymen and has especially delighted in preying upon Spaniards. His methods have often been original and fearless, yet he has often played the common role of garroter and burglar. The one tender pulsation in the black heart of this ruthless robber beats in unwavering faithfulness and idolatrous love for his daughter, a beautiful girl eighteen years of age, whom he is educating in Brussels, who is ignorant of the true character of her bandit father and upon whom he lavishes almost all the money that comes into his hands by this system of "forced loans."

More romantic than Churcho el Poto is the little I can gather about a gang of wreckers who were pursued and shot less than a month ago in the State of Durango. The leader of the band was well known to the Mexican public by sight and through a record of daring deeds and bloody crimes. Young and boyish in appearance; handsome, dashing, and so beloved by the entire clan of eighteen brigands that the identity of this chief was never betrayed nor suspected. The other day the rurales tracked them down, and sent eight bullets through the captain's heart and destroyed the whole band, not leaving one to tell the story, which all will long to hear, as I did when I learned that the handsome bandit boy was only a bit of successful masquerading, for when the riddled sombrero was removed and the bullet-burnt blanket thrown aside, a shapely form was revealed and the astonished soldiers learned that the leader of their foe had been a woman.—Mexico Letter in S. F. Chronicle.

The Dear Old Grandmother.

She sits patiently, day by day, in her easy chair, the sweet face growing purified by suffering, and the hands that, for nearly eighty years, have been busy in good works, folded now in quiet submission to the will of her Saviour. Almost finished, this life that began so many years ago, that was cradled in a mother's loving arms, and guided by a father's gentle hand up the alluring slope to womanhood, and given there into another's keeping. Led on tenderly through sunshine and shadow, until the "silver cord was loosed and the golden bowl broken," and she was left to travel the rest of the earth's journey alone, save for the companionship of her children. I wonder if, when the house is still and the taper burns dimly, memory lifts the curtain of the past, and the dear patient grandma wanders once more in the old familiar paths and by-ways; or whether her thoughts go out to that other and fairer country, where there is no more sickness, no more dying, no more separation? Only a little while longer, and the summons will come, the easy chair will be vacant, and the face upon which the peace of God seems resting will have vanished; but the beautiful lesson of patience and resignation which our dear grandma has taught us will linger forever.

A Spike Driven Into His Head.

Valentine Fritz, in whose head a spike was found a few days ago, died in Baltimore from the effects of his injuries. Recent developments indicate that his case is one of the most mysterious murders that has ever occurred in that community. The spike drawn from his brain was nearly four inches long and was driven in up to the head. It proved upon examination to be a boiler rivet, the end of which had been sharpened. The spike has been carefully examined, and the prevailing opinion now is that it was only lately driven into the head. It was first suspected that the crime was committed by an idiotic son, who was seen going into Fritz's room some nights ago with a hammer in his hand. Experts who have examined the spike say it was never struck by a hammer, but had been driven into the skull by a piece of wood or soft piece. Some children discovered the old man lying ill near the tracks of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, on the outskirts of the city. He never recovered, and, although the spike was not discovered for several days later, it is supposed that it was driven in then. No reason for such an act can be assigned. He could not have committed the deed himself, as the position of the nail shows.

APPLE-BLOSSOM HONEY.

What a Producer Says About its Superiority Over Other Kinds.

"Bee men always think that honey made from sumac is the best there is," remarked a large producer of honey the other day; "but I've just discovered something that beats sumac honey all hollow," he continued. "Here, taste of this, and tell me what you think of it." And he produced a jar of strained honey, which, in its clearness and purity, seemed fit for the gods to sip. It was tasted, and found to possess a peculiarly delicious flavor—a flavor which all said they had never noticed in honey before.

"That's apple-blossom honey," explained the bee man, as he watched with delight the effect of his saccharine products on the palates of his listeners. "When the apple-blossoms came out there wasn't much of anything for the bees to work on, so they put in their best licks in the apple trees, and they soon stored away a good many boxes of this here honey. I was examinin' the hives one day, and I tasted some of the honey, when I noticed how much pleasanter it was than any other honey I had ever seen, so I concluded to find out what it meant. Recollectin' that the bees had had nothin' much but apple-blossoms to work on, and noticin' the apple-blossom flavor to the honey, I soon came to the conclusion 'twere these flowers that made the honey taste so good. When the apples had done blooming I removed the honey and kept it separate. A good many people have eaten it, and they are all so delighted with it that I believe I could sell tons of it for a cent or two more on a pound that even sumac or white clover honey will bring," remarked the bee farmer as he disposed of his last box of honey to an eager customer.

The whitest honey is made from the blossoms of white clover. Its flavor is fine, too, and it always commands the highest price. Sumac honey is not so white, but it is thought by most people to possess a richer flavor, and it is in great demand. Remarkably fine honey is made from the basswood tree. But those who know a good deal about honey producing say they never tasted anything that equaled the apple-blossom honey above referred to. The comb is white, but not such a beautiful silvery white as that made from white clover or buckwheat. Otherwise in appearance it resembles buckwheat honey. In Wayne County, Penn., there are several large apiaries which produce thousands of pounds of honey every year. Probably the largest producer in Orange County, N. Y., is Mr. Wisner Utter, of Amity. In Sussex County the largest bee raiser is Mr. T. L. Babcock. While managing his large farm he finds time to devote to the bee industry, and he sells a great deal of fine honey. He it was who made the discovery about the apple-blossom honey. It may interest the amateur bee-keeper to learn that the Cyprus bee is considered the best. The Italian is the largest, and is an excellent worker, probably the best of all. But the Cyprus bee, although nearly or quite as small as the native, is such an active little fellow and so pugnacious that he not only does a great deal of work, but what is more important in honey producing for profit, he will not permit neighboring bees to rob him. The bees are great sinners in this matter, and steal from neighboring colonies whenever they get a chance, and a weak colony of native bees will sometimes submit to having nearly all its store pilfered away before the necessity of organized resistance becomes apparent. But when that supreme moment of defensive warfare begins, woe to the unlucky aggressors! Each thief is caught by two or three bees, carried outside the hive, and there killed and his body rolled over the side of the hive upon the ground.

A Thrilling Adventure.

"Bandits! bandits!" said a traveler just returned from Mexico. "Why the country is full of them. You can't go anywhere without a guard."

"They are desperate fellows, I suppose," remarked a bystander.

"Desperate is no name for it, and they have no more fear of guns and pistols than we have of firecrackers; but they are easily frightened by anything they can't understand, just like the Indians, for that matter, as I had the good fortune to discover."

"Were you ever caught?"

"Once; there were about two hundred of them and I was alone. Of course, they only laughed when I grabbed my pistol, and, crowding around me, knocked the muzzle up every time I tried to shoot, until all the barrels were empty."

"But you escaped with your life, it seems."

"Yes; while they were debating whether to shoot or carve me, I suddenly drew a match from my pocket, and grabbing the first outside I could find in another pocket I lit the match and threatened to blow them and myself into a million pieces. They took one look at the mysterious thing I held in my left hand and ran like a pack of hounds. Those ma! I sometimes wonder if they are not running yet."

"But what was the mysterious thing you threatened to ignite?"

"A box of snuff."

THE HUMOROUS PAPERS.

WHAT WE FIND IN THEM TO SMILE OVER THIS WEEK.

WELL QUALIFIED.

"So you would like to become a blacksmith, would you?" he said to a little barefoot boy, as he stopped blowing the bellows for a moment.

"Yes, sir," the boy replied, "I would like to learn the trade."

"Are you strong and healthy?"

"Yes, sir."

"And quick? I wouldn't have a boy around me who wasn't quick."

"Yes, I'm quick."

Here the boy stepped his bare foot on a hot horseshoe, and the blacksmith remarked:

"Well, I guess I'll give you a trial. You seem to be one of the quickest little boys I ever saw."—N. Y. Sun.

MYSTERIES OF A BUCKET-SHOP.

"They called it a 'bucket-shop,'" he was explaining to the boys, "and I dropped in to see what sort of buckets they sold. They had some little ticking machines, and a blackboard, and a man with a loud voice and a pointer, and I put up $25 as margin on something or other, and made $15 in less'n twenty minutes."

"Is it possible!"

"You bet! And I made up my mind I'd have some more of it, and I put up $40 as margin again on something or other more, and in less'n twenty minutes I——"

"Made $75!"

"No, ma'am. The fellow said I was closed out, and had better come the preparatory."

"What on earth is that?"

"Why, grease my boots preparatory to a walk of twenty-five miles by the dirt road to get home!"—Wall Street News.

THE WRONG SHOE

"Here, mister, you've dropped your overshoe!" shouted a gentleman in a Mission street car the other day, as an old man got out at a crossing and hoisted his umbrella.

The old party didn't appear to hear, so the kind-hearted passenger seized a No. 12 gum boot that lay on the floor and hurled it after the oblivious party, his property taking him square in the back of the neck as the car rolled away.

The passengers were all astonished at the shoe-loser's irritation, for he shook his fist angrily after the car and walked off without picking up his rubber. Everybody roared, especially the shoe-thrower, until a little boy stopped eating peanuts and said to him:

"I guess you dropped that shoe yourself, mister; you've got only one on."

The explosion nearly jarred the car off the track.—San Francisco Post.

WHAT THE BAD BOY GOT.

"Once upon a time," began the teacher, "two brothers started to Sunday school on Sabbath morning. Their way led past a fine peach orchard, where the trees were hanging over with ripe, luscious peaches. One of the brothers proposed going into the orchard and getting some of the fruit, but the other refused and sped away, leaving his companion greedily devouring the peaches. Now it happened that the owner of the orchard saw them, and the next day rewarded the good boy, who refused to steal his peaches, by giving him fifty cents. He got a prize for his honesty, and what do you suppose the other boy got for his dishonesty?"

"He got the peaches!" yelled every member of the class, and another penitentiary story was ended.—Atlanta Constitution.

NO DANGER OF SUICIDE.

They were talking about an Ohio man.

"So," says No. 1, "I understand B's wife has run away, his house burned down and his fortune lost and the deuce to pay generally."

"It's too true," was the reply, "and B. is a very sensitive man. I am told he is almost crazy over his troubles."

"I heard he was in such condition that his friends feared he would commit suicide. Do you think there is any danger of that?"

"Pshaw! All fol de rol. He won't kill himself. He holds a government office."—Hatchet.

TIMES HAVE CHANGED.

Prospective Bride—"How long ought a honeymoon to last, ma?"

Ma—"They usually last only a few weeks, but I knew one to last three months."

"How delightful! Who was the bride?"

"I was."

"Perhaps mine will, too."

"I fear not. The country is not troubled with sentimental issues now."

"Why, what difference does that make?"

"I was married to your father the day before he went off with the three-months' volunteers."—Evening Call.

A MATTER YOUNG MAN.

"Jane, I hear your beau is a little wild, not very steady, they say."

"Oh, yes he is; he is one of the most steady young men I ever saw."

"Steady? Oh, no, he can't be. I've heard he was anything else but steady."

"Well, he just is steady. He has always come to the house every evening since we were engaged, drunk or sober."—Evansville Argus.

CHILTON VIEW.

Published Every Thursday Morning.

CLANTON, ALA., SEPT. 4, 1884.

Democratic prospects are like sunshine in May; they are growing brighter every day.

Something over a year ago Clay county, Ga., adopted the prohibitory law. The merchants declared last fall that trade was ten per cent. better than in any previous fall. The calaboose at Jonesboro' has been advertised for sale and the sheriff says his business is ruined. No new cases of importance have been added to the court docket.

Mr. J. C. Hill of Ninety-six, S. C., says the following receipt for pickling beet cannot be excelled, and that his family are now eating fine roast put up in November: To four gallons of water add ten pounds of salt, a quarter of a pound of saltpeter and one pound of sugar. Boil a few minutes and then skim off. When cold pour over your beef. Keep beef covered in this solution and you can have it to eat all Winter.

The wife of an American author is reported to have recently said to him: "My dear, you are always hunting for people to put in novels. Why dont you put me in?" "I have already," was the reply. "Oh, when? Why didn't you tell me?" "I was afraid you would not like it, dear." "Of course I should. How silly! What is the name of the character?" "You mustn't be angry, then—'Calamity Jane, the Terror of Treasow Gulch.'"

A Kansas paper says putting five hundred bushels in a car, it would require four hundred thousand cars to carry the corn that will be grown in Kansas this year. Allowing twenty cars to a train, twenty thousand trains would be necessary, and giving to every train the space of one-fourth of a mile the procession would be five thousand miles long. If the cars were twenty-five feet long and put in a solid train, the string would reach two-thirds the distance from Boston to San Francisco.

The redoubtable "Brick" Pomeroy will conduct a five Democratic campaign paper in New York city called the United States Democrat. Four years ago "Brick" said that if the Democrats ever elected a President, it would be Grover Cleveland, of New York.—Ex.

This year he says that Grover Cleveland will be elected President and Thomas A. Hendricks will be elected Vice-President, and they will be sworn in and take the position to which they will be elected, and make better men in their respective positions than any who have filled them since the days of Jackson and Jefferson.

In the French quarter of New Orleans is an old house with enormous dormer windows jutting out of the roof. Once it was covered with bright yellow plaster, bits of which remain away up among the eves. Back in the last century it held the earthly belongings of Lafitte, the celebrated pirate of the Gulf, and not unfrequently the freebooter himself found rest and pleasure beneath its angular roof. In a large room is where the pirate and his crew were wont to make merry after a successful foray. Just back of it is where the chief slept when he stayed on shore over night, and through a door leading into a dark, covered alley, and communicating with the street beyond, he drove any slave that he desired to sell at the slave mart not far distant.

They tell us, said John B. Gough, that alcohol gives strength and nourishment. No, it does not; it gives stimulus. You sit down on a hornet's nest, and it may be quickening, but not nourishing. A man once said to a friend of mine: "You are fighting whiskey, but it has done a great deal of good; has saved a great many lives." "You remind me," said my friend, "of the boy who was to write an essay about a pin, and in his boyish way he said: 'A pin is a very queer thing. It has a round head and a sharp point, and if you stick them in you they hurt, and women use them for cuffs and collars, and men use them when their buttons are off. If you swallow them they will kill you. For five cents you can get a package of them, and they save thousands of lives.' He teaches with 'What do you mean? How have they saved thousands of lives?' 'By not allowing them,' answered the boy."

The Congressional Convention.

The Congressional Convention of the Democratic and Conservative party of the fifth district is now in session at Verbena. Permanent organization was effected with W. F. Wilkinson, of Autauga, as Chairman, and W. A. Collier, of Chilton, Secretary; J. C. Street, of Clay, and D. W. McIver, of Macon, Ass't Secretaries.

The first ballot resulted as follows:

Thos. Williams, 37 25-24; Thos. W. Sadler, 15 2-8; N. S. Graham, 21 1-6; W. F. Foster, 15 43-56; W. D. Bulger, 37-84. Necessary to a choice 90 2-3.

The second ballot: Thos. Williams, 44 23-24; Thos. W. Sadler, 14 2-8; N. S. Graham, 22 2-3; W. F. Foster, 16 43-46; W. D. Bulger, 35 70-84.

The third ballot: Williams, 46 22-24; Bulger, 36 43-40; Graham, 24 1-6; Foster, 14 1-3; Sadler, 14 2-3.

Fourth ballot: Williams 45 17-24; Bulger 37 1-24; Graham 23 5-84; Foster 15½; Saddler 14 2-3.

BY TELEGRAPH.

LATER.—Special to the VIEW received at 11 o'clock Thursday morning: Seventy-fourth ballot: Williams 61 5-16; Bulger 38½; Graham 35 5-12. The names of Messrs. Foster and Saddler had been withdrawn.

A later telegram shows the dead-lock to be getting worse: Eighty-second ballot: Williams 54; Bulger 44; Graham 38.

The prospect is that the balloting will change but little until the race narrows to two candidates.

The Louisville Exposition.

[Special Correspondence.]

DEAR VIEW:—The Exposition is now under full headway. Have attended quite often. The competitive drills were well attended, and were pronounced the chief attraction thus far. The Montgomery Greys did some splendid drilling, and if the uniforms of this company had been as showy as those of the other companies, the Greys would undoubtedly have taken the first prize. This morning's paper contained an article to that effect. The Greys presented the poorest appearance of any company in the contest. The scoring of the five companies was one of the best on record, and the judges were forced to postpone their decisions twenty-four hours in order to determine which companies had won the first and second prize. Tredways, of St. Louis, first, Greys second.

The Exposition is not so good as it was last year, but the fireworks display is better and draws immense crowds. With the exception of Kentucky, Alabama has the best exhibit in the building, and the L. & N. railroad, Mobile and Cullman deserves nearly all the credit for it. With the exception of the L. & N. exhibit from our State, nearly everything is from Cullman or Mobile, and the principal part from Cullman. It is hard to understand why other towns and counties in Alabama did not contribute more. The town of Cullman is principally Dutch I believe. Their exhibit is a fine one, and shows how far that people surpass us in zeal and enterprise. Every one that sees the Alabama exhibit will hear of Cullman, and that town will thus gain considerable advantageous advertising. Other towns in the State might have done the same thing if they would. The Exposition, though not so good as whole has a great many attractions that it did not have last year. The Alabama exhibit has been added to considerably and is one of the principal features of the Exposition.

J. C. L.

A Disgusted Republican.

Mobile Register.

Decent men all over the country have been disgusted at the introduction of filth into the Presidential campaign. Not only is it demoralizing to society, but it presents American politics to the world in an aspect that is mortifying to every true lover of his country.

Because some Blaine partisan thinks the dissemination of scandal regarding Governor Cleveland is the proper way to answer the serious charges against their own candidate, it must not be supposed that all Republicans have degenerated. For instance, here is a letter from a Massachusetts Republican—not an Independent—to the Republican Central Committee of his State. It explains itself:

LEE, MASS., August 2, 1883.

Gentlemen—Have just received your package of Boston Journals containing the details of the "Cleveland scandal," which I suppose you expect me, as Republican town committee, to distribute. The aforesaid package is at my office subject to your order, as I do not propose, as town committee or otherwise, to assist in political warfare so mean and contemptible. If, after the nomination of James G. Blaine, anything were wanting to disgust Massachusetts republicans who are not office-holders, office-seekers, or blind partisans, with the present methods, tendencies and leadership of the party, the detestable business in which your committee is now engaged should supply the want. If the "grand old party" cannot be saved from defeat without resorting to methods corrupting to the morals as well as the politics of the country, the question whether it is worth saving is fully and completely answered. Yours truly,

CHARLES E. HIBBARD.

It will appear from this manly letter that the writer is so thoroughly disgusted with the cowardly and dirty policy of the Massachusetts Republican Committee that he will welcome the defeat of the G. O. P. and probably assist in bringing it about. The course pursued by the Massachusetts committee is beneath contempt. Such also has been the course of the paper it is circulating.

PARTY ORGANS.

How They Dish Up the Political News of the Day.

Chicago Herald.

"If the party organs wouldn't lie as like pirates there would be some fun stumping the state," said a politician at Republican headquarters.

"I made a speech up in Wisconsin last week to a very fair crowd. The hall was comfortably filled, and after the meeting there was a very creditable torchlight procession. The next morning I picked up a little Republican paper which contained this notice: 'The campaign was opened here last night by Col. ——— of Chicago, with one of the ablest and most stirring speeches which that wonderfully gifted orator ever made. The opera house was packed to overflowing, many ladies being present, and the enthusiasm was intense. Hundreds who unsuccessfully sought admission to the hall went home cheering wildly for our noble standard-bearers. The torchlight procession at the close of the meeting was one of the most brilliant spectacles ever seen west of New York. Keep the ball rolling.'

"Then I picked up a measely Democratic sheet and read this: 'The Republicans made a sickly attempt last night to hold a ratification meeting, but so many of them had joined the glorious old Democratic party and the others had so much crow sticking to their teeth that they found it very difficult to screw up a crowd. After the band had played for an hour in front of the opera house, the speaker, an importation from Chicago—who was evidently under the influence of liquor—began to harangue the empty benches. There were just seventy-nine people in the hall by actual count, including seventeen boys, many Democrats who went out of curiosity, and a dog. The orator's best points fell like dead cats on the public ear. There was absolutely no enthusiasm and Deacon Harris, who has been through every campaign since that of 1832, says he never saw anything so dismal before. After the meeting a few men hired by the bosses and a lot of boys marched around the streets for a little while with torches, but they cut such a despicable figure that they soon became ashamed of themselves and slunk away to their homes. Next week when the Democrats ratify, we will show the opposition such an uprising of the people as will make them wish they'd let the business alone."

Protracted Meeting at Jemison.

MR. EDITOR:—Allow me a short space in your valuable paper to tell your readers of the protracted meeting that commenced at this place last Saturday and closed this evening. It was a Union meeting between the Baptist, Methodist and Presbyterian churches at this place, and behold we realize now if never before what the Psalmist meant when he exclaimed: "Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." If we are not mistaken there were more than 40 conversions, with 36 accessions to the churches, of which number the Baptist received 22. The ministers in charge of the meeting were Revs. J. C. Armstrong (Presbyterian) G. T. Lee (Baptist) and Rev. Mr. Cousins (Methodist). They were assisted by Revs. A. E. Burns, R. M. Honeycutt and J. M. McCord. May this good work continue is our sincere prayer. EUELL.

The Right Kind of a Judge.

Judge Drummond said to three Milwaukee lawyers who had put in bills amounting to $25,000 for settling an estate worth $33,000: "Gentlemen, you consider yourselves good lawyers. How much more are your services worth to your clients than mine are to the people? You have charged $25,000 for sixty days' services. Could you not be content, each of you, to take my pro rata for the same time? Those charges are infamous. They are such as men who are scoundrels and thieves at heart would make. This charge of $15,000 is cut to $2,500; those of $5,000 each to $500. Repeat such a piece of robbing in this court, and I will disbar every one of you.—Memphis Avalanche.

Miss Mattie Hannon has returned from a pleasant visit to relatives in Talladega.

Died, at Jemison, on the 28th ult., Mrs. Elizabeth Manning, at an advanced age. The deceased was the mother of Mr. S. J. Manning.

Prof. A. E. Burns was ordained as a minister in the Missionary Baptist Church at Jemison, on last Sabbath. Rev. J. M. McCord officiated in the ordination; and was assisted by Revs. Geo. T. Lee and R. M. Honeycutt.

The Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, of New York, is the largest life insurance association in the world, and does the most business; has 23,000 members, $300,000 surplus, and $100,000 deposited with the Insurance Commissioner of the State of New York.

Mrs. F. F. Tarrant, an accomplished graduate of Judson Female College at Marion, Ala., will assist Prof. W. U. Acree in Verbena Academy during the next year. She is a lady of long experience as a teacher, and will no doubt add greatly to the prestige of the Academy.

A new enterprise and a substantial enterprise in this section is the mammoth road engine now being run in Clanton and vicinity by Mr. Noblett. We hope for Mr. N. great success. His enterprise is in the way of an innovation which is calculated to save our saw mill men much labor and expense.

A protracted meeting at Jemison conducted by Revs. Geo. T. Lee, J. C. Armstrong, R. M. Honeycutt, and Rev. Mr. Cousins, of Randolph, has resulted in much good. Twenty-six had united with the churches up to Saturday night. On Sunday afternoon twelve applicants for admission to the Baptist church were baptized by Rev. Geo. T. Lee.

Verbena Academy will open next Monday. This is a school that Verbena is very justly proud of, and one which she should sustain well. The principal, Prof. W. U. Acree, has been offered several prominent and remunerative positions since the Academy was opened, but he has chosen to remain at Verbena, and has succeeded in building up a remarkably fine school for our section.

We have just received from the publishers a copy of a little book entitled: Seven Hundred Album Verses, containing 128 pages of choice selections of prose and poetry, suitable for writing in autograph albums. Who among our readers has not been invited to write a few words of sentiment in the album of a friend? As an aid to the many thousands who have received this invitation and have not known what to write, this little volume is issued and we can recommend it as containing the largest and best collection of such verses we have ever seen. It will be sent to any address by mail, postpaid, in paper cover for 15 cents; cloth 30 cents, by J. S. Ogilvie & Co., Publishers, 31 Rose Street, New York.

The colored Baptists of Clanton have completed their new church building. The lot on which the building is located was donated for the purpose by one of the influential members of the church, John Callen. Rev. Dick Richardson is the pastor in charge, and his is a history not uninteresting. He was a slave, born and raised in Tuskaloosa county, on North River, New Lexington, and was the property of John Pruitt, now deceased. He is seventy-six years of age. He remembers distinctly the passage of Gen. Jackson and troops through Tuskaloosa on the way to New Orleans in 1814, at which time he (Dick) was seven years old. Dick was sold to a Montgomery planter about 1846, and says he went to Montgomery with the State capital. He married in Montgomery, and he is the father of twenty-two children. His last wife is still living in Montgomery county, and he hopes to bring her to this place before his days are ended. He has been preaching since two years previous to the emancipation.

Last week was published an item relating to a dastardly outrage perpetrated by a negro upon a white lady in Benson beat. It has since been learned that the scoundrel did not accomplish his hellish design. A vain search of several days length was made for the negro in the immediate section with blood-hounds. On Saturday last, Mr. W. H. Foshee, went to Brierfield, and arrested and brought to Clanton King Latham, who is known in these parts as a deep dyed villain. Latham was placed in the county jail, and the lady was sent for, and came to Clanton, reaching here Monday afternoon. Two citizens of the neighborhood of Brierfield, made oath that Latham was at work pulling fodder on their farm, eighteen miles from the scene of the crime, during the entire day on which it was said the crime was attempted. There seemed no disposition on the part of the men to shield the negro. Their supposition was that the lady, in an excited state of mind, might have been mistaken as to the negro's identity. A description of the negro given by his intended victim led to Latham's arrest, and the following is her sworn statement:

"She was in the garden at 9 a. m. gathering vegetables. She returned to the house, and had been seated but a few seconds, when she was grasped by the shoulder from behind, and turning she found herself in the hands of a negro who had a shot-gun. She screamed. The negro cursed her and ordered her with an oath to keep quiet. She continued to scream, until the negro released her when she rushed from the house into the field, the negro following her and threatening to shoot her if she did not stop. That she ran to where her husband was at work. She then stopped and pointed out the negro to her husband. The negro, seeing her husband, had turned, and was making his escape. That she did not know the prisoner's name, but that she felt certain he was the one that made the assault upon her."

The lady is of one of the most highly respected families of the county. Latham was carried to Montgomery by Sheriff Smitherman on the evening mail train for safety. Tell McCary, another negro charged with a like crime, was carried down at the same time. It is probable that this move saved the necks of the prisoners, as a feeling was culminating, which it was feared, would have resulted in a lynching, had they remained here until night came on.

A small cannon is at the depot the property of one of the faithful members of the g. o. p. It is probably to be used in firing the last salute over the political grave of Blaine and Logan in November.

A Stinging Snake.

STRASBURG, ALA., Aug. 26, 1884.

EDITOR VIEW: Dear Sir—I killed a stinging snake yesterday, which I found in a spring from which I use water. It is about three feet long, very black on the back, with red and black spots on the belly. I never saw a snake of similar color. I did not know that it was a stinging snake until I struck it, when it made some powerful efforts to get in the shape of a hoop, but I held it down with a stick on its head, pressing it to the ground until I wounded it, so that it could not run, then it would roll its tail up and strike at me. It would roll around the stick I had in my hand, and try to stick its sting in it. The horn on the end of its tail is about ¼ inch long, tapering off very sharp. I write this to you, so you may publish it if you wish. I think it a dangerous snake, and people should be warned of it.

Yours truly,

J. BELL.

The VIEW is delayed a little this week in order to obtain something definite from the Congressional Convention.

JUGGLERS' TRICKS.

SOME STRANGE ONES THAT HAVE NEVER BEEN EXPLAINED.

Vanishing Into the Air and Returning Dismembered—Disappearing in Smoke.

"When I was younger," said an exhausted juggler after a dinner, "and was traveling around the country with an idea in my head that the office of American was to teach the world, as a consequence, I often got left, as the Arabs say. On this occasion I went ashore at an Arab village four or five miles inland, where it was reported that a famous juggler lived. We were a jolly party, all besides myself being sailors, and having a hard time riding on the native ponies they had provided us with; but, after many enquiries, we managed to reach our destination, where we found the fakir, and made up a purse of about two dollars, without which nothing could be done. Some of his tricks beat anything I ever came across.

"He was a tall, thin, olive-hued fellow, with long black hair caught up behind and tied with a string. He was extremely reticent, and all through the performance neither smiled nor uttered a word. His first trick was to arrange our party about him in a circle of about thirty feet in diameter, and we were so close together that no one could pass out without our knowing it. To prevent such a possibility he gave us a cord to hold. This being done, he and a smaller native, with a bundle of wood, took their places in the center. The young man arranged the wood in a pile and lighted it, and when it blazed up the older man seized him and threw him upon the flames and immediately there arose a dense, suffocating smoke that seemed a mixture of flesh and sandal-wood. It rose about their heads and spread about until it completely hid them, and from it came such groans and cries that several of the men called out that we had better take a hand, as the boy was being murdered. But I reminded them that it was only a trick, no matter how realistic. We waited, perhaps, five minutes, when the yells ceased and the smoke gradually cleared away, and there stood the fakir alone, the young man having, to all intents and purposes, been burned. He was scooping something from the fire—evidently ashes—into a flask which was handed to us and passed around—the cremated remains of the assistant."

"But," interrupted a gentleman at the foot of the table, "didn't he slip out in the smoke?"

"There was no place to go," was the reply "as we were in a clearing, away from trees and bushes. But the strangest part is to come," he continued. "After passing the flask around he took it back, and placed it in the centre of the circle, and, putting some wood under it, lighted it. Almost immediately the flask began to grow before our eyes; the fire blazed, and a rich odor of sandal-wood floated about, and in ten minutes the flask had expanded until it was the size of a large keg. The fire was then put out, and we were beckoned to come near and examine. I touched it, and it seemed a jar of earth made of plaster and mud; it had a ringing sound as I struck it with my seal-ring; to the hand was hot. After looking it over we returned to our places; the old fakir then took a hammer, waved his hands in the air, uttered some mystic words, and struck the vessel a hard blow that broke it in pieces, when out stepped the boy we had seen—or thought we had seen—cremated, as bright as you please. I should be glad to have the trick solved, but have never found any one who could explain it satisfactorily. Some aver that the old fakir concealed the young man about his own person; but that was simply impossible, as I felt of the fakir myself, and he had nothing on but a shirt, open in the back, and a pair of trowsers.

"These tricks are equally as remarkable," continued the story-teller, "as those Polo claims to have witnessed in China, years ago.

"Another consisted in the conjurer taking a ball of wood that had been perforated in several places, and through which strings were passed, and hurling it up into the air. Up it went, dragging the cord after it, and finally disappearing. The head man now instructed a boy assistant to mount, which he did, climbing up the cord until, finally, the spectators lost sight of him, or thought they did. The fakir now seemed to be in distress at losing him, and called loudly, then, as if in a rage, he seized the rope and clambered up after him, having a knife in his mouth. In a few moments a dismembered leg, all bloody, fell to the earth; then another, several fingers; and, finally, the head and trunk. Finally, the old fakir himself, appeared, his clothes covered with gore, looking like a butcher.

"As soon as he recovered from his evident assertion he went through some manœuvers, and, collecting the dismembered and bleeding parts, gave the body a push, waved his hand over it, and calling the body by the head jerked it to its feet, and off it walked, nothing the matter with it.

"In Bangkok a similar feat was witnessed a few years ago by Mr. Ralph Churchill. The juggler tossed a rope ladder into the air, and sent goats, dogs, cats, boys and alligators up one after another. All of them appeared running toward him from a distant quarter, ten minutes later. These are tricks that seem almost superhuman, yet are ludicrously simple when known."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Statistics show that the tendency to suicide is much greater among regular gamblers from losses than among business men. The sharp strain of the gaming table, short though it may be, spoils the nerves, and weakens fortitude more than the strain of business. Cavour, one of the most nervous of men, was within an ace on one great gambling night of throwing half his fortune away rather than call a card, and only called it, as he related himself, because a drop of perspiration rose on his opponent's forehead.

COMMANDER SCHLEY.

Incidents in His Life—Two Stories His Modesty Will Not Tell.

It has already been mentioned that Commander Winfield Scott Schley is a Marylander and a member of a well-known family of that name. He is the son of John T. Schley, who was for many years a leading member of the Bar of Frederick County. His father died in this city eight years ago, and was buried in Frederick, where he had lived so long. His widow, Mrs. S. M. Schley, is now with her daughter, living at No. 20 Courtland street, Baltimore. Both are naturally proud of the heroic achievement of Commander Schley, and speak with a just admiration of his gallant conduct. Mrs. Schley says: "Scott was always fond of the sea from boyhood, and never seemed at home upon land. He loved his wife first and his ship next. I remember hearing him say the last time I saw him, 'On board ship I feel at home; on land I feel as if I was good for nothing.' His father was always, when a boy, anxious to enter the navy, but his father put his foot down on it, and he never got to sea. With his sons it was different, for three of them entered the navy. Scott was appointed to the academy of Annapolis from Frederick, by Congressman Henry W. Hoffman, and has been in the Government service ever since. He was very anxious to go on this expedition, although he had never been in the arctic region before, and he seemed to be confident that he would find the Greely party. He did not, however, expect to find them as soon as he did, but told us to look for him in October. He is, therefore, home several months ahead of time. We hope to see him soon. His wife is Mrs. Nannie Franklin, daughter of Mr. George B. Franklin, of Annapolis. They have three children. Scott is very fond of his family, a man of very pleasant and amiable character, always in good humor, and never out of temper. His success is, of course, a matter of great pride to all his family."

Commanner Schley graduated at the Naval Academy in 1859, and went to Japan with Commander McKean. He was promoted to master in 1861, and was attached to the frigate Potomac, a store ship, at Ship Island, in 1862; to the gunboat Winona, of the West Gulf blockading squadron, and engaged with a field battery near Port Hudson, La., December 14, 1862. He was also in the engagements which led to the capture of Port Hudson from March 16 to July 9, 1863, and in one or two small skirmishes in cutting out schooners. He was commissioned as Lieutenant on July 16, 1862, and from 1864 to 1866 was stationed on the Wateree, of the Pacific Squadron. On July 25, 1866, he was commissioned Lieutenant-Commander. He was placed at the Naval Academy from 1867 to 1869; then was transferred to the Benicia, of the Asiatic fleet; then back to the Naval Academy during 1873-6. He was commissioned Commander June 10, 1874, from which time he had charge of the Essex, of the South American station, until 1878. Commander Schley has never been on the sick list since he entered the service. —Baltimore American.

"Malden's Rock."

There are 650 "Maiden's Rocks" in the State of Michigan alone. That means lots of beautiful places where beautiful Indian maidens with their sylph-like legs and graceful shoulders, and beautiful faces preferred to leap from the rocks to be wedded to a horse-thief whom they could not love. We don't blame 'em one bit, although it would have been less trouble to choke themselves to death or step on a rattle-snake.

Wisconsin has 300 Maiden Rocks, Iowa 180, Illinois 187, Indiana 250, Vermont 567, and we were counting up the total the other day, and found the figures to be 13,862, with Idaho and Washington Territories yet to be heard from. Thirteen thousand eight hundred and sixty-two Indian maidens softly stole from as many wigwams at sundown and climbed to the top of as many rocks. Their old bull-dosing dads beheld them and called to them to come down and get some paregoric, but they sang their wild death-chants and flung themselves on the rocks below.

One thinks of it with sadness. The maidens hadn't orter done it. Had they waited a week or so they would have entirely recovered from the feeling and admitted that the old man was right in arguing that an Indian husband with a broken nose and fourteen ponies could take the cake over a love-sick youth without a second pair of socks to his name. We are now preparing in this office the sad history of the Indian girl's leap from Maiden Rock. The same story answers for the entire 13,862 maidens. Each one perished for love in the same sad way, and the father of each died of grief. Owing to the recent reduction in the price of ink we can furnish these sad tales at the low price of ten cents each, or three for a quarter. They are warranted to fit any scenery, stand in any climate, and cause old ladies to sob and young ones to shiver. Don't address us unless you mean business.

He was Just Mad.

A very neat mot is credited to Judge Grover, in a tilt at the bar with Judge Peck. The latter had delivered a particularly rasping speech, to which the former felt compelled to reply in kind.

"Your honor," he said, "it rained last night, and this morning, when I took my course across the fields, at almost every step I came upon some slimy, venomous creature that had issued from its hiding-place. Snails, toads, frogs, lizards, worms, snakes, vipers, adders—every description of loathsome reptile was to be seen, crawling, filled with venom, and yet, your honor, though there seemed so many of them, all of them put together would not have made up a Peck!"—Harper's Drawer.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Lieutenant Schwatka fell over a rocking chair in San Francisco the other day and broke his arm, after exploring the Arctic regions without accident.

Over one hundred bushels of grasshoppers have been captured this summer on one farm in Plymouth, N. H., by the owner, for which he received a bounty of $1 per bushel.

Two thousand and twenty-five dozen eggs shipped from Cape Breton to Boston were accidently found to have been cooked by the heat of freshly cut grass in which they were packed.

The Italian Government has been advised by its Consuls to prohibit the emigration of organists with monkeys, on the ground that they give a bad reputation to Italy in foreign countries.

At Gisborne, New Zealand, in March last, died A. H. Braithwaite, the man who designed the locomotive Novelty, which competed with George Stephenson's locomotive Rocket, so many years ago.

The law prohibiting the sale of malt and spirituous liquors in Iowa has boomed the sale of buttermilk in that State and many saloons are to be opened for its sale by persons who formerly sold intoxicants.

The State Treasurer of New Hampshire has issued a notice to the Selectmen of towns, that in presenting claims for bounties on woodchucks, they must certify that none of the animals were killed on Sunday, else the claim wil not be allowed.

Waterloo is a small and insignificant village in the province of South Brabant in Belgium. Brussels, the capital of Belgium, is distant about nine miles in a N. N. E. direction, so that Byron's poetical assertion that the cannons' opening roar was heard in the capital may not have been altogether imaginary.

A story is on the rounds to the effect that the Mayor of Boston sent two packages exactly alike in weight and contents by mail a few days ago. One of them was bound to Paris, France, 3,000 miles or so away, and the postage on it was 20 cents. The other was destined for Worcester, forty miles away and the postage was 28 cents.

The other day a woman fell into that pellucid stream, the Irwell, near Manchester. She was rescued alive, but subsequently died. An inquest revealed the interesting fact that the cause of her death was not drowning as had naturally been supposed, but poisoning by swallowing the waters of the river. This is a pleasant idea.

Diamond discovery has had much the same effect at Cape Colony as gold had in California. Colonists, dazzled at the rapid rise to wealth of a few, have abandoned agriculture for diamond seeking, only to find penury. This state of affairs is reflected in the bankruptcy court. There is a returning disposition now to trust more to mother earth's vegetable rather than mineral productions.

The bog peat of Mexico is now being used on a considerable scale as fual for locomotives, stationary engines, smelting purposes, smiths' fires, and household use. The peat is mixed with a proper proportion of bitumen, and is said not only to burn freely, and without smoke in much quantity, but to give a higher dynamic equivalent of heat than the same amount of wood.

A prominent operator in speaking of the reduction in wheat which had taken place of late, remarked: "The stocks of the world on the 1st of the present month were only 45,500,000 bushels against 82,500,000 on the 1st of January and 60,000,000 on July 1, 1883. These figures represent the wheat and flour reduced to wheat in ten principal cities of Europe and the visible supply in America."

Woman's Sixth Sense.

Here is a singular instance of the working of that subtle, fine sixth sense, which is apt to affect women more than men and which is so mysterious in character that we often incline to deny its existence at all. A lady sat sewing quietly in her sitting room and in an inner chamber the nurse had just put the baby to sleep and laid her in her bassinette. As the nurse came out of the chamber she said to her mistress:

"The little thing is asleep for three hours, ma'am, I'll warrant."

The nurse went down stairs and for about a minute the mother sewed on. Suddenly a desire seized her to go and take the sleeping child from its crib.

"What nonsense!" she said to herself. "Baby is sound asleep. Nurse just put her down. I shall not go."

Instantly, however, some power, stronger even than the last, urged the mother to go to her baby and after a moment she rose, half vexed with herself, and went to her chamber. The baby was asleep in her little bed, safely tucked in with soft white and pink blankets. One small hand was thrown above the little brown head. It was half open, the exquisite fingers slightly curved and the palm as rosy as the depths of a lovely shell.

"My baby!" whispered the mother, adoring the little sleeper as mothers will. "My own little baby!"

She bent over suddenly a third time, impelled by that mysterious force which was controlling her, and for no apparent reason took the sleeping babe in her arms and went swiftly into the other room. She had scarcely crossed the threshold when a startling sound caused her to look back. Through a stifling cloud of thick clay dust she saw that the ceiling above the baby's cradle had fallen, burying the heaps of rosy blankets and lying heaviest of all upon that spot where, but for mystic warning, her little child would even now be lying.

Bells.—The heaviest bell in the United States was cast in Boston for the City Hall, New York, and weighed about twenty-three thousand pounds. It was broken in 1857. The largest in America is the one in Notre Dame Cathedral, Montreal, Canada, weighing twenty-nine thousand four hundred pounds.

BLOOD WILL TELL.

The History of a Former Restaurant Keeper Recalled on the East Side.

[From the New York Sun.]

A young man with a cold, impassive face and an air of sullen contentment leaned over the desk of a fashionable up-town hotel and watched the stream of men that oozed through the corridor. He wore the traditional diamond, and when he nodded carelessly to the wealthy business men, influential citizens, and well known politicians they seemed to feel that they were honored, and they smiled. He seldom smiled. When he did, it was with an air of reserve, as befits a man who knows his own importance.

A slim and sombre man, with well-brushed clothes, a high white hat, and a vapid smile drifted up to the desk, and, calling the clerk by name, remarked that it was a pleasant night.

"Yaas," drawled the clerk, looking him coldly in the eye.

"Things have been stupid down town to-day," ventured the visitor, with just a tinge of embarrassment.

"Yaas," said the clerk again.

"Is—is there anything for me?" the man with the white hat asked, after some hesitancy.

"Yaas," said the clerk for the third time. Then he looked about carelessly for a little while, examined his finger nails with some interest, talked a bit to a friend, and presently went to the letter rack. He skimmed over the mail rapidly, selected three large envelopes, all of fashionable appearance and addressed in feminine handwriting, and tossed them to the inquirer. The man with the white hat picked them up and wandered off languidly to the reading room.

"Did you notice that man?" said the clerk to the writer.

"Yes."

"Well, he's been at it now for four weary years. You can see what he is. He has no money, and his clothes are pretty far off, but he has as big a reputation out of New York for being a blood as any millionaire you could name. He comes from Boston, and he pretends he is a broker here. He has used our letterheads, ink, and other facilities for years, and I happen to know that he has never spent a cent in this house since he came in here the first time four years ago. Then he bought a cigar at the stand there and asked us to look after his letters. You know any man can have his letters sent to a hotel, and the hotel must keep them until called for. I believe there is some law that bears on the subject. We have over a thousand letters here awaiting for people to claim them. This hotel, as you know, has a big name through the country, and people who live here must spend considerable money. That's why so much mail comes here. It sort of gives a man tone when people think he's stopping at this house."

"But people usually stop here for a short time before they ask you to take care of their mail, don't they?"

The clerk smiled derisively. "Well, I should say not. If they did, we would be worth considerable money. That man in the white hat is a fair sample of them all. We have hundreds like him. I found out exactly who and what he was through a suspicion I had once that he was crooked. I got the house detective to look him up, and found that he came from Boston. He lives over on Third avenue in a hall room that rents for $3 a week, and takes his meals at the free lunch counters. His friends in Boston think that he lives here, and he becomes a great blood when he goes home."

One Way to Cure a Balky Horse.

A friend, whose name and address I will give to any one, writes to the Talker thusly: "I notice you are always ready to say a good word for that noble animal, the horse. Our neighbor had a good horse—a large, handsome horse. In one respect he was better than most men, for he had but one fault, but that was a bad one, and greatly reduced his cash value. He would balk, and always just when you didn't want him to. My father was a humane and a practical man. He happened to want a good horse. He offered our neighbor a low price for his balky horse, and then and there he became straightway the owner of the animal. For several days he fed and flattened the horse, making his acquaintance. On a pleasant day he put him before a single wagon, putting a newspaper in the seat, leaving the whip in the stable, and started off for a drive. After going off in good style about a mile the horse came to a dead halt and expressed signs of a good, long stay. My father quietly took up the paper and perused it. In about one hour the horse started off in full gallop and went about a mile further and came to another full halt. The paper was resorted to for about one-half hour, when the horse started again in full stride. After going a short distance he headed him toward home, which was reached in good time. The next day he repeated the experiment with only one balk, and that only one half as long. The third day was a success; no balk at all. He then passed him to the teamster, who put him in with another horse and worked him six months, during which he was never known to balk, and not having further use for the horse sold him for $50 more than he paid.—Christian at Work.

A Boscawen man who felt what for a few thousand dollars last week rushed around and rented a brown stone front and then sought the services of a furniture mover. "I'll take it by the job and do the fair thing by you," replied the mover. "Well, how fair?" "I'll say $50 for the two." "What two?" "Why, the moving this week into the brown stone and the moving in about a month from that into a cheap frame house in the suburbs? I always job the moves together in the case of a swell aquaintance."

MY LOVE AND I.

We loved each other, my love and I;
And the wind sighed low through the ripened corn.
The bobolink sang in the dewy morn,
And the brook ran merrily by.

We loved each other, my love and I;
And the quail piped low mid the yellow corn,
We heard in the distance the huntsman's horn,
And the leaves were brown and dry.

We looked to the future, my love and I,
The future so crowded with hopes and fears,
That turns our smiles so often to tears,
As the days pass wearily by.

He spoke of the time when we two should dwell
Together beneath fair Southern skies,
Where the rose in its fragrance never dies,
And I love hears no parting knell.

The corn was garnered long years ago,
The bobolink's song is heard no more;
Only a shadow falls through the door
Where he used to come and go.

The sea is wide, and it lies between
My love and I, my love and I;
Where the flowers bloomed dead leaves now lie,
And the grass o'er his grave is green.

BY CHARLES READE.

Two women, sisters, kept the toll bar at a village in Yorkshire. It stood apart from the village and they often felt uneasy at night, being lone women.

One day they received a considerable sum of money, bequeathed them by a relation, and that set the simple souls all in a flutter.

They had a friend in the village, the blacksmith's wife; so they went and told their fears. She admitted that theirs was a lonesome place, and she would not live there, for one, without a man. Her discourse sent them home downright miserable.

The blacksmith's wife told her husband all about it when he came in for his dinner.

"The fools!" said he; "how is anybody to know they have got brass in the house?"

"Well," said the wife, "they make no secret of it to me; but you need not go for to tell it to all the town—poor souls!"

"Not I," said the man; "but they will publish it, never fear; leave women folk alone for making their own trouble with their tongues."

There the subject dropped, as man and wife have things to talk about beside their neighbors.

The old women at the toll-bar, what with their own fears and their Job's comforter, began to shiver with apprehension as night came on. However, at sunset the carrier passed through the gate, and at sight of his friendly face they brightened up. They told him their care, and begged him to sleep in the house that night.

"Why, how can I?" said he; "I'm due at ——; but I will leave you my dog."

The dog was a powerful mastiff.

The women looked at each other expressively.

"He won't hurt us, will he?" sighed one of them, faintly.

"Not he," said the carrier, cheerfully. Then he called the dog into the house and told them to lock the door, and went away whistling.

The women were left contemplating the dog with that tender interest apprehension is sure to excite. At first he seemed staggered at this off-hand proceeding of his master; it confused him; then he snuffed at the door; then, as the wheels retreated, he began to see plainly he was an abandoned dog; he delivered a fearful howl and flew at the door, scratching and barking furiously.

The old women fled the apartment, and were next seen at an upper window, screaming at the carrier:

"Come back! come back, John! He is tearing the house down!"

"Drat the varmint!" said John, and came back.

On the road he thought what was best to be done. The good-natured fellow took his great-coat out of the cart and laid it down on the floor. The mastiff instantly laid himself on it.

"Now," said John, sternly, "let us have no more nonsense. You take charge of that till I come back, and don't ye let nobody steal that there, nor t' wives' brass. There, now," said he, kindly, to the woman. "I shall be back this way breakfast time, and he won't budge till then."

"And he won't budge, John?"

"Lord, no! Bless your heart, he is as sensible as any Christian—only, Lord's sake, woman, don't ye go to take the cost from him, or you'll be wanting a new gown presently, and maybe a petticoat and all."

He retired, and the old women kept at a respectful distance from their protector. He never molested them; and, indeed, when they spoke cajolingly to him he even wagged his tail in a dubious way. But still, as they moved about, he squinted at them out of his bloodshot eye in a way that checked all desire on their part to try on the carrier's coat.

Thus protected, they went to bed earlier than usual, but they did not undress; they were too much afraid of everything, especially their protector. The night wore on, and presently their sharpened senses let them know that the dog was getting restless, he snuffed, and then he growled, and then he got up and pattered about, muttering to himself. Straightway, with furniture, they barricaded the door through which their protector must pass to devour them.

But bye-and-bye, listening acutely, they heard a scraping and a grating outside the window of the room where the dog was, and he continued growling low. This was enough; they slipped out at the back door, to save their lives; they got into the village. It was pitch dark, and all the houses black but two, one was the public house, casting a triangular gleam across the road a long way off, and the other was the blacksmith's house. Here was a piece of fortune for the terrified women. They burst into their friend's house. "Oh, Jane! the thieves are come!" and they told her in a few words all that had happened.

"La!" said she; "how timorous you are! ten to one he was only growling at some one that passed by."

"Nay, Jane, we heard the scraping outside the window. Oh, woman, call your man and let him go with us."

"My man—he is not here."

"Where is he, then?"

"I suppose he is where other working-women's husbands are, at the public house," said she, rather bitterly, for she had her own experience.

The old women wanted to go to the public house for him; but the blacksmith's wife was a courageous woman, and beside, she thought it was most likely a false alarm.

"Nay, nay," said she, "last time I went for him there I got a fine affront. I'll come with you," she said. "I'll take the poker, and we have got our tongues to raise the town with, I suppose."

So they marched to the toll-bar. When they got near it they saw something that staggered this heroine. There was actually a man half in and half out of the window. This brought the blacksmith's wife to a standstill, and the timid pair implored her to go back to village.

"Nay," said she. "What for? I see but one—and hark! it is my belief the dog is holding of him."

However, she thought it safest to be on the same side with the dog, lest the man might turn on her. So she made her way into the kitchen, followed by the other two, and there a sight met her eyes that changed all their feelings, both toward the robber and toward each other. The great mastiff had pinned a man by the throat, and was pulling at him to draw him through the window, with fierce but muffled snarls. The man's weight alone prevented it. The window was like a picture frame, and in that frame there glared, with lolling tongue and staring eyes, the white face of the blacksmith, their courageous friend's villainous husband. She uttered an appalling scream, and flew upon the dog and choked him with her two hands. He held and growled, and tore till he was all but throttled himself; then he let go, and the man fell. But what struck the ground outside like a lump of lead was in truth a lump of clay! The man was quite dead and fearfully torn about the throat.

So did a comedy end in an appalling and most piteous tragedy; not that the scoundrel himself deserved any pity, but his poor, brave, honest wife, to whom he had not dared confide the villainy he meditated.

How Dogs Get Rabies.

A correspondent writes to the Lancet: "In sequence to your just observations on the annoyance caused by the barking and howling of dogs, allow me to make some remarks on the creation of rabies in dogs. You most justly assert that it is neglect and misery which are the origin of the cries which make 'night hideous.' Such, also, is the fact relative to canine madness. Neglect, misery, unwholesome food, unnatural treatment, are often the root from which that dire disease springs. When a mad dog bites many people he sometimes quite scares for a long career of brutalities, insults, and oppression inflicted upon him by the baser or more ignorant portion of the human race. The hard blow, the savage kick, the loud curse, the opprobrious, the insulting word, the starving meal, the careless food, the shortened chain, the rotten straw, the dirty kennel (appropriate name!), the bitter winter's night, the parching heat of summer, the dull and dreary years of of hopeless imprisonment culminate there, and this cup that the poisoned man is forced to drink. In addition to the above, bite breeding dog days, and thereby preventing them from having access to their natural medicine, is certainly calculated to seriously damage their health. Professor David Low, F. R. S. E., in his able work on 'The Domesticated Animals of the British Isles,' makes some sagacious observations on unnatural and ignorant treatment of the canine race. The idea of preventing rabies by tying together the jaws of dogs, or by chaining or incarcerating the animals, is as senseless as hanging a 'bell' against a comet."

At Toulon, France, two Polish youths made a bet as to which one could drink the most seltzer water. One drank nine syphons and the other eight. Both died shortly after of cholera.

SECURING THE RECORDS.

A Sketch of Texas in Its Early Days under Sam Houston.

About two years after the revolution General Houston had his first difficulty with the people. Under the Constitution the Capital had been fixed at Austin, but power was given to the President to order the temporary removal of the archives in case of danger. The Comanches were committing ravages within sight of Austin, and General Houston ordered the State records to be forwarded to him at Washington, Texas. This caused much excitement in Austin, and four hundred men placed themselves about the State House to prevent the removal. Colonel Morton, a leading spirit of the revolution, was at their head, and wrote to General Houston, who well knew his character as a fighting man, that, if the archives were removed, he (Morton) would hunt him down like a wolf. General Houston replied in a note of characteristic brevity: "If the people of Austin do not send them, I shall come and get them, and if Colonel Morton can kill me, he is welcome to my ear-cap." The guard was at once doubled, patrolmen were placed on the roads, and a select committee went into permanent session in the City Hall. During a sitting of that body one who was unannounced suddenly stood in their midst, having gained entrance by means of a tall live oak which grew against the window; his garb and arms were those of a hunter, and, being spoken to by Colonel Morton, he placed his finger on his lips and remained silent. Colonel Morton flew into a rage and seized him, when the stranger drew his bowie knife at the same instant that Morton's friends held him back. Another member of the body spoke to the stranger, saying that the meeting was a private one, and that he presumed that the gentleman had mistaken the house. At this he walked to the table and wrote one line, "I am deaf." Judge Webb then wrote, "Tell us your business," when a letter was handed to him, addressed to the citizens of Austin, which the Judge read aloud as follows:

"FELLOW CITIZENS: Though in error, and deceived by the arts of traitors, I will give you three more days to decide whether or not you will forward to me the archives. At the end of that time you will please let me know your decision. SAM HOUSTON."

The deaf man waited a few minutes for a reply and was about to leave, when Colonel Morton handed him a note saying: "You were brave enough to insult me; are you brave enough to give me satisfaction?" The mute wrote: "I am at your service," and after fixing terms he left by the window. Morton was told he would be killed, as he was to fight Deaf Smith, who never missed his man; but he could not be shaken in his resolve. The weapons used were rifles, the distance was one hundred paces and the time sunset. A vast crowd saw the duel. Morton was dressed in broadcloth, his antagonist in smoke-tinted buckskin. Both were cool and stern. At the given signal both fired at the same instant; Morton sprang into the air and fell dead, a ball in his heart. Deaf Smith quietly reloaded his rifle and walked into the forest. Three days afterward he came with general Houston and ten others to Austin, and the archives were removed without further opposition.

A Few Yet Left.

"Heavens! but I'm melting!" he gasped, as he entered an ice cream parlor.

"Yes, sir," replied the girl at the soda fountain, as she reached for a glass.

"Dear, me! but such thirst I never had before. Have you ginger ale?"

"Yes, sir."

"Ah, yes; but they say it is heating. Any root beer?"

"Yes, sir."

"Exactly; but roots are not always good for the health. Depends upon the kind of roots. You have soda water?"

"Yes."

"Doctors say it produces a gas in the stomach. How's ice cream?"

"Very nice, sir."

"Yes, but lowering the temperature of the stomach so suddenly is apt to produce spasms. No lemonade, eh?"

"I can make you some."

"Never mind. My wife died suddenly after drinking a quart of it. Young lady?"

"Yes, sir."

"You may hand me a glass of water. It is probably the safest and best thing for the system at this stage of the game."

He got it, but he only took one sip. It was blood-warm. The girl had seen two or three like him before.—Detroit Free Press.

WITCHES.—The descendants of Rebecca Nourse, who was hanged as a witch at Salem, Mass., on July 19, 1692, held an anniversary reunion at Danvers, a few days ago, at which about 200 of her representatives were present. Benjamin P. Nourse, of Boston, presided, and arrangements were made for the erection of a monument to be dedicated a year hence. An interesting feature of the occasion was a letter from the poet Whittier expressing the opinion that, in the execution of Rebecca Nourse, the people of Salem hanged the best Christian woman among them.

Sheep on the Farm.

Wool is so low in price, with no certain prospect of any material increase, that the keeping of sheep, except under favorable circumstances, will require very close and economical calculations if any profit is to be realized. I have not much faith in securing an increase of the duties on foreign wools by a revision of the tariff laws; and if an increase of the duties should be obtained, it is eminently proper to consider sheep husbandry upon the basis of small protection and small returns. Sheep fit in so nicely upon the farm that they can hardly be dispensed with. They have an advantage over other stock, inasmuch as they may be made to furnish an income twice in the year—first the wool, and then the lambs.

They may be made to do more than this, and really to afford another income in the autumn or winter by the fattening and sale of the old sheep or the surplus stock. After trying all kinds of stock, I have returned to sheep, believing them to be indispensable for a complete development of all the resources of the farm. There is no stock so well calculated for rugged hillsides or rough pastures, and to prevent the growth of weeds and bushes. Where sheep have the range of a field very few weeds will ever go to seed, and bushes will be so thoroughly cropped that they will either die or be kept from making much of a growth. When a farmer can thus easily turn the weeds and bushes of a farm into excellent manure, and at the same time have them converted into mutton and wool, it is certainly a good thing.

Sheep will always do this. They will thrive in pastures and get fat where cattle would almost starve. They also scatter their droppings over the field, and never fail to enrich lands where they are kept. On poor farms they are most emphatically the best factors for increasing fertility. On rich lands the same rule holds good, as they will make them richer. By the simple means of a portable shed, which can be moved about the field and under which the sheep will readily congregate, the poorest spots may be made fertile, and the whole field, by frequent and regular changes of the flock, may be thoroughly enriched.

When I was a small boy, my father purchased a large farm, which has been devoted to sheep husbandry for years. He went heavily into debt in the purchase, and I recollect to have heard him say a number of times that the sheep which had belonged to the former owner paid for the farm. What he meant was that they made the farm so productive and caused it to yield such bountiful crops, after he became its owner, that he was thus enabled to make his payments. This productiveness lasted for years, and made the farm famous for large crops. There are in the older States a great many farms, now run down with continuous grain culture, which hardly pay the cost of the labor bestowed upon the crops.

In the keeping of sheep, although the direct returns from them may not be as great as they have been in former years, the advantage to be derived from them in the improvement of the soil should be taken into account. If, by these means, better crops can be grown, there is additional inducement for stocking the farm with sheep. There cannot be any doubt about this result. A number of years ago, when a large flock of sheep was kept on Kirby Homestead, a strip of land the most exposed of any in the field was well dressed with sheep manure. The entire field was sown with rye and seeded with clover. The portion where the sheep manure was put produced three times as much rye to the acre as the rest of the field. The clover grew so rank that its very nature was changed, and instead of dying out the second year, as it is likely to do, it lived for years and made an excellent growth.

From the facts set forth in this article, and others, I have been led to add a flock of sheep to the stock on the farm, with the intention that the farm, under my plan, must be made to keep them, and the certainty that they will be aids in its improvement and most useful factors in increasing the manure. When others go out, it is a good time to go into stock. Certainly this is a better policy than to rush with the crowd and make the extremes which unsettle markets, by overproduction at due time and scarcity at another. The whole section of country around me is now a loser on account of selling the sheep, and some of the best farmers have resolved to begin sheep raising again—this time to stick.—COL. F. D. CURTIS, in Rural New Yorker.

MUCH has been said as to woman physicians in Russia, but according to a competent authority there are only some 200, and whatever their acquirements and abilities they are only allowed to treat the diseases of women and children. Even in country districts, where there is, perhaps, no male physician within fifty miles, apothecaries have been forbidden to put up a prescription emanating from a woman.

AN illiterate soldier contrived to spell the word "usage" without using a letter properly belonging to it. He wrote it "yuseuh."

THE CHOLERA IN EUROPE.

What a Distinguished Physician Says to Say About the Origin of the Disease.

The Toulon correspondent of the Paris Gaulois has had another interview with the celebrated Dr. Koch, who sticks to the theory that the cholera is the work of microbes, or microscopic organisms, which are taken into the system with food and water.

"All my autopsies," said the doctor, "leave no doubt whatever in regard to the Asiatic character of the plague. I have found precisely the same phenomena as were discovered in the cases that I studied in India. The microbes were the same, and were more numerous than in cases that I have examined in Egypt. Messrs. Strauss and Roux, who were present at the autopsies, also recognized in Egypt the presence of the Indian microbe, but it was always accompanied by others; but in the cases in Toulon the Indian microbe has an extraordinary preponderence. In addition to its other destructive qualities this microbe secretes a genuine poison, which produces insensibility and brings on the dry cholera, which is the most deadly and rapid of all. As I have already said, the contamination is not carried in the air, but it is brought about through the absorption of the microbes that infest alimentary matter, and particularly water."

"And this theory," said the Gaulois correspondent, "explains your advice to the authorities to close the wells, to order people to drink only water that had been boiled or taken from distant localities?"

"Precisely," said the doctor. "And it is also necessary to take only food that is well cooked; for, bear in mind, the microbe dies in a high, and above all, in a dry temperature. The first precaution to take is to subject the bed-clothing of the victims to a high temperature, with dry air and phenic acid, more or less condensed. The microbe cannot live in condensed solutions of phenic acid or in dry air. It must not be forgotten that it develops and multiplies in humidity. It has been found in the ponds of the countries where cholera exists. Acting upon this theory, I advised the closing and thorough heating of the apartments infested."

Correspondent—What is your opinion doctor, as to the origin of the present epidemic?

Dr. Koch—I believe it is safe to say that in view of the precautions taken by the navy, the cholera could only have been brought by some merchant vessels, probably by an English ship; for on board English vessels there is little scruple about concealing the deaths during a voyage or about falsifying the books.

The Paris says that German societies have bought up all the phenic acid in the market, and are now selling it at double its value, while at the same time German scientific lectures are being widely published in which the use of phenic acid is strongly recommended as a preventive against cholera.

France and China.

Though there is a panic at Foochow, says the New York Herald, war between France and China is not very probable. English newspapers are apt to exaggerate the gravity of the situation. England has much to gain by the weakening of French ascendancy in the China seas. While she would affect to deplore a conflict, it would really delight her.

But it does not seem that anybody else wants France and China to fight. China, indeed, objects very strongly. The courtiers talk war, but at heart mean peace. The Emperor is a boy; the Empress holds the regency on sufferance; the successful march of an enemy to Pekin would probably upset the entire dynasty. And France has no sort of desire to overturn thrones. She has still to pay the Tonquin bill. She still mourns for her slain.

But Le Figaro has probably found the convincing reason for asserting that there will be no war. It has learned that the Chinese read the articles of its witty contributor, M. Albert Wolff. "Can we draw swords with a race so civilised?" it asks. Certainly not. The culture of the Chinese has again saved them.

A Wealthy Oil Operator.

Jonathan Steele, a wealthy oil operator, died at his residence in Oil City, Pa., May sensational stories have been told about Steele hoarding his money and the attempts to steal it. As he was distrustful of banks he placed $75,000 in greenbacks in a tin box and kept the box under his bed. Several masked burglars entered the room and attempted to steal it, but he succeeded in driving them off by his physical superiority. On another occasion, finding that the notes were becoming mouldy, he spread them on the grass in his yard to dry, and while watching them a puffof wind came along and filled the air with greenbacks. It was with difficulty that he gathered them together again. It took several days to dry them all, and he and his family stood guard over them while the neighbors and people from a distance came to see a fortune spread over the grass. After this he invested all of his money in Government bonds except $1,000, which he placed in the Fairview Bank, which soon afterward collapsed. He became almost [illegible]

A Constantinopolitan Fire Company.

We soon caught sight of the captain of the company. He was a tall athletic fellow, wearing short, loose trousers of white cotton cloth. His legs were bare below the knees; he wore Turkish red shoes on his feet without stockings—a loose jacket of brown felt over a white cotton shirt, and his head was covered with a metallic bowl, which shone brightly. A leather belt encircled his waist and was clasped with a large brass buckle in front. He was coming toward us in a double quick trot, brandishing, in a proud manner, the brass spout that belonged to the hose. He was followed by the engine and the firemen that belonged to it. Oh, what a sight! Most of them were scantily clothed and some did not even have caps upon their heads, but I noticed that all wore the regulation belt with the large buckle in front. They were evidently of the class which composed the riffraff of the city. The engine itself was nothing more than a big sized garden pump, carried on the shoulders of eight men, four in front and four behind. They relieved one another every now and then with great dexterity and alertness.

They soon swept by us, followed by the hose, which was coiled over a long pole, the ends of which rested on the shoulders of another file of men. Just as they reached the next corner there emerged from a side street another engine, whereupon a squabble for the right of way immediately arose. The two companies jostled and pushed forward, each one trying to get ahead of the other. After a long harangue and bluster, accompanied by constant yelling, screaming and hard words, they lowered their respective engines to the ground and fell into a regular fight, wrestling, pushing and knocking one another down in a most ferocious manner. Their looks and actions were frantic and they fought like madmen.

"Ah! There comes the Ser-Asker, the minister of war! He'll soon settle their dispute!" cried a voice near us. And he did.

He was preceded by a necevbetjes, who cleared the way for him, and when he came up he promptly ordered the companies to take up their engines and follow him, which they did with the utmost meekness and alacrity. There was no chance now for either party to claim the victory, but they kept up a subdued rattle of words all the way.—St. Nicholas.

How to Have a Loving Wife.

If you would have a loving wife, be as gentle in your words after as before marriage; treat her as tenderly when a matron as when a miss; don't quite make her the maid of all work and ask her why she looks less tidy and neat than when "you first knew her;" don't buy cheap, tough beef, and scold her because it does not come on the table "porterhouse;" don't grumble about squalling babies if you cannot keep up a "nursery," and remember that baby may "take after papa" in his disposition; don't smoke and chew tobacco, and thus shatter your nerves, and spoil your temper, and make your breath a nuisance; and then complain that your wife declines to kiss you; go home joyous and cheerful to your wife, and tell her the good news you have heard, and not silently put on your hat and go out to the "club" or "lodge," and let her afterward learn that you spent the evening at the opera or at a fancy ball with Mrs. Dash. Love your wife; be patient; remember you are not perfect, but try to be; let whisky, tobacco and vulgar company alone; spend your evenings with your wife, and live a decent, Christian life, and your wife will be loving and true—if your did not marry a heartless beauty, without sense or worth; if you did, who is to blame if you suffer the consequences?

The Best Sugar Boom.

The best sugar boom which has been so foolishly attempted by some parties who know nothing of the difficulties of the culture of the beets and the manufacture of the sugar from them, as exchange says, will meet a "knocking out" blow in the fact that a large quantity of beet sugar is now brought here from France and Germany. Just now the sugar business is exceedingly depressed, and there is a glut of sugar and molasses in every market. It is said that molasses cannot be given away in Cuba, as the cost of the casks, freight, and other charges, including import duty, amount to more than the market value here, which is now about 15 cents per gallon only. Under these circumstances farmers will hardly find sugar crops profitable; but, notwithstanding all this, they should grow them, if only for fodder purposes, that facility in their culture may be acquired in readiness for a better time.

WHO CAN TELL WHY?—"Why is it that a man, whenever he passes a broom lying in the front hallway, always stands there still and shocks till he is black in the face for the chambermaid to come and pick it up instead of picking it up himself and placing it where it belongs? But, then, some men have good reasons for so doing. [illegible]

THE HUMOROUS PAPERS.

WHAT WE FIND IN THEM TO SMILE OVER THIS WEEK.

THE NOMINATION.

Mr. Walcott is a gentleman who has been in bad health for some time, so he consulted with a prominent Austin physician, who told him he must travel for his health.

"I have neither the money nor the inclination to travel," replied Walcott.

"Well, I'll tell you what to do," suggested the medical adviser. "You are employed in a bank. All in the world you will have to do will be to steal about $10,000, and you will have both the inclination and the money to travel."

AN EXCEPTION TO THE RULE.

"No, my children," said an uptown physician, "never waste anything, never throw anything away. Some day you may find use for it."

"How about banana skins, papa?"

"H-m—banana skins. Yes," replied the doctor, thoughtfully, stroking his chin, "banana skins are a possible exception. You may throw banana skins away."

THE MOST DIFFICULT THING.

"How glorious it is to be engaged in a purely intellectual occupation," said a Boston maiden, gazing rapturously into the admiring eyes of a country editor; "your own mental faculties for tools and the whole universe for a workshop. Now tell me," she added, "what do you find the most difficult thing connected with your noble profession?"

"Paying the hands," said the editor. —Phila. Call.

BOARD AT THE SEASHORE.

"What is your price a week for this room?" asked a gentleman of a seaside landlord.

The price was named.

"Does that include the ocean air, or do you charge extra for that?"

"Well," replied the landlord hesitatingly, as though he wasn't the man to charge for anything that he could possibly afford to give away, "that depends. Of course, if you keep your window open all night I should expect to add a little something to the bill."

MALAPROPOS.

"I see by the paper," said Mrs. Brown to her husband, "that your friend Jones has had a handsome bull dog presented to him by his admiring friends."

"Good gracious, is it possible!" exclaimed Mr. Brown. "How injudicious! Why, that will ruin him."

"Ruin him? Why so?"

"Why, the man has four marriageable daughters that he is trying to get off his hands."

WHAT IT'S CRIED.

Little Jack—"Pa, why is a receiver so called?"

Pa—"What kind of a receiver do you mean?"

Little Jack—"Why, I mean the kind that is appointed when a company gets in a tight place. What does a receiver receive?"

Pa—"Pretty much all there is, my son."—Rec. Call.

"I will wear a waterproof cloak. I've been at picnics before."—Somerville Journal.

Agee, the incumbent, for the office, which he refused to give up, reclaiming that his time was not up until November. The matter is to be litigated. O, for more offices!—Ex.

A certain patent medicine is advertised in an exchange under the head of "Health is Wealth." Two cuts appear on the advertisement one represents a man alone and enjoying himself reading, and this picture is headed "Brain." The other cut represents a man and woman, and is headed "Nerve." We gather from this that it requires brains to live alone, and a good deal of nerve to hitch on to a better half. Exhibit your nerve young man.

The vote of R. H. McCoy and another independent Democrat from Chambers county was counted in the Congressional convention at Verbena, they having been sent as delegates from a certain beat in Chambers. McCoy is the man who ran for congress in this district two years ago against the regular nominee. So long as the lamp holds out to burn, the vilest sinner may return. But how about the Southern white men who would stoop so low as to vote for a nigger for office, in preference to the nominee, a gentleman of the Democratic party, and then make capital of it? Why he can also return! Such Democracy!

Col. Cash, of Chesterfield county, South Carolina, is at large again with an arsenal. The State declines to prosecute him for complicity in the recent murder of the Town Marshal by his son, Bogan Cash, and the Colonel has gone on the warpath against the members of the Sheriff's posse who extirpated his offspring. The ancient Roman is a very picturesque and interesting figure in the patrols Chesterfield county with all his arms at half mast; and there seems to be less little doubt entertained that he will very shortly murder somebody. The Roman he is converted into a tradition the butter, but it is a pity that it cannot be done by the proper and natural process of the law, instead of by a vigilance committee, as is threatened.

HON. THOS. W. SADDLER.

The Successful Contestant for the Honors of the Fifth District.

The above named gentleman was nominated on the 170th ballot at the Congressional Convention last week at Verbena. Col. Saddler is a practicing lawyer of Prattville. He has never held any position of honor or trust save that of Hancock elector in 1880. His nomination was made unanimous by the convention. The Birmingham Iron Age has this to say of him:

Hon. Thos. W. Saddler, of Autauga county, who was nominated for congress by the democrats of the fifth district, at Verbena, yesterday morning, is a native of Jefferson county, and is a brother of Mrs. Fleming Jordan, of this city. Mr. Saddler is about fifty-three years of age, and has for some years successfully practiced law. He lived in this county, near Jonesboro, in the Pleasant Hill neighborhood until after he was grown. He went to Prattville, where he was a merchant, until the late war began when he entered the army and served the South through its trying times. When peace was declared he farmed on a large scale in Perry county, near Marion; but this vocation was unsuccessful, and he determined to practice law. He was over thirty-five years old when he entered the bar of Prattville. It was soon proved that he chose his new path wisely; for it was not long before he had built up a valuable practice. Mr. Saddler is regarded as a man of exceptional ability and is said to be especially gifted in oratorical powers.

Alabama's Deadly Weapons.

Very few people of Alabama know what a large sum of money is invested in this state in guns, pistols and other deadly weapons. Hence, we are not surprised to find the editor of the Athens Courier, after examining the assessment list of Limestone county, express astonishment and a sense of regret at the figures disclosed. The Courier says:

"It is enough to cause a blush to rise to the cheek of every farmer in Limestone county to compare the difference in the taxes of dirks, knives, guns, pistols, etc., and that of the farming implements. A look at the two will show these figures:

Farming implements—$3,099.

Dirks, pistols, etc.—$5,587.

The very things that are the greatest curse to the land are far ahead of those that are the most necessary for the good of the country. This is enough to cause a blush of shame to mantle the cheek of every law-abiding man in the country."

But as bad a showing as Limestone county makes it is nothing when compared with the figures from the whole state, and for every blush for his county the Athens editor must give five for the state at large, because the value of the deadly weapons of the whole state are more than five times as great. —Birmingham Age.

The Courier and the Age are unnecessarily distressed it seems. If their editors will examine the exemption laws it will be seen that each farmer in Alabama is allowed $25 worth of farming implements exempt from taxation. The aggregate in Alabama thus exempt would no doubt be more astonishing than are the figures on the deadly weapons. It is not every farmer that owns $25 worth of farming implements, and it is safe to say that the number is quite large of those who pay no tax at all on this kind of property. This fact being considered we feel no hesitation in publishing that Chilton county citizens are taxed for $6,326 worth of deadly weapons, and $113 worth of farming implements.

Hon. C. C. Shorter Declines to Run for the Speakership.

EUFAULA, ALA., Aug. 12, 1884.

Editor of the Monroe Journal:—As you were kind enough to present my name for the Speakership through the columns of your paper and many of my friends of the press very zealously seconded your suggestion, upon my declining to enter the race for the position, I take this occasion to express to you and those partial friends my profound gratitude for their generous support and words of encouragement. Their flattering advocacy of my candidacy has made me feel deeply the value of genuine friendship, and placed me under an obligation long to be cherished. My withdrawal from the candidacy is mainly due to the fact that the names of two distinguished friends of mine, gentlemen living in my immediate section, are being urged for the Speakership. They have been long in the service of the State and are more entitled to the honors of the party and possibly better capacitated for the position than I am. I am unwilling to antagonize their candidacy, preferring to be classed with their friends. I assure you that I appreciate far more than I can express, the efforts of my friends in my behalf; and their interest in my success makes me feel very sensibly the significance of the compliment bestowed.

Sclp. Holly's Execution—Anonymous Letter.

On the 28th inst., the day before the hanging of Scip. Holly, at Tuscaloosa, Probate Judge Browne received the following anonymous and incendiary letter given verbatim:

TUSKALOOSA, ALA., Aug. 28.

Judge Brown:

Sir—I sit down this evening to write you a few lines in regard to the hanging of that man. To you and the citizens of Tuskaloosa and Tuskaloosa county, hang him if you want to, but we, the colored people of this State and county, intend to, if this is done, to put this your town in ashes if it takes twelve months. We cannot stand it any longer we are going into an open fight—that is kill or be killed. There is no law nohow. Everybody is doing just as they please—that is the white people. So we are going to take chances, live or die, I don't care a dam.

A Tinker's Dam.

New York Star.

The following letter from Gen. Butler places some information where it is evidently needed:

BOSTON, August 10, 1884.—To the editor of the Star: The editor of the Boston Herald does not seem to know enough to be wicked when he wants to be. He closes an article upon your humble servant in the Boston Herald of Sunday as follows:

"Can anybody believe that a man with his record cares a tinker's malediction for the principles of any party?"

Now, he evidently thinks that a "tinker's dam" is a cuss-word. Will you inform him that in the olden time, when traveling tinkers went about the country mending the holes in the tin kettles and pans, he frequently found one that was ragged and rusty so that the soldering iron would not take, and he was obliged to fill it up with a mass of solder. To keep the solder en masse over the hole while in the melted state he was accustomed to take some crumbs of bread and moisten them, and make a little ridge around the hole with the moistened crumbs to hold the solder in its place as he melted it in. This was what was called a "tinker's dam," which he brushed away after he had finished, as it was utterly useless; so that our pilgrim fathers used the words, "Not worth a tinker's dam," never dreaming that they were profane. The editor of the Herald evidently thinks he has been swearing all his life, and when he hasn't and that he must soften the word down into "malediction." Yours truly,

BENJAMIN F. BUTLER.

Callierville Dots.

We had quite a nice rain the 29th ult., which was needed very much. Our farmers had a nice time saving their fodder, but the cotton and young corn crops have been cut short by the drouth.

Our young folks had a nice pic nic and base ball game the 30th ult., at Mr. Parnell's old mill.

Rev. Mr. Green filled his appointment the fifth Sabbath evening at the academy. Had a better congregation than before, but then he ought to have had a better one.

Miss Lizzie and Sadie King returned home the 29th ult., after enjoying a pleasant visit to their uncles.

Our Sabbath School is looking up a little. We have now an enrollment of 49. If church members would turn out as they should, with their children too, we would have a much larger and better one. Our Superintendent, Mr. Thomas DuBose, is quite an active member.

While a certain crowd in a one-horse wagon was passing along the road the other Sabbath, a little boy exclaimed, "Grand-ma where is the town, I don't see any houses at all, ain't this Stanton?" He was told, 'yes' it was Stanton. "Well," he persisted, "where are the houses?"

Several deer have been killed near Dixie lately. Mr. Pritchel seemes to be quite a successful hunter. H. J. H.

That Mother Hubbard Dress.

A very tall girl, wearing a Mother Hubbard dress, stepped on a platform scales at Coney Island (says the New York Sun) and informed the proprietor that she wished to be weighed. He placed a two-hundred pound weight on the hook, and the suddenness with which it came down frightened him. Then he tried a one-hundred and fifty pound weight with the same result. "Strange," he muttered, with a perplexed look at the girl; "something must be wrong with the scales." Finally after repeated attempts, he informed her in a dubious tone of voice that she weighed just eighty nine pounds. "Thank you," she said handing him the nickel: "I seem to be gaining," and she tripped away. Then the amazed scaleman looked after her and remarked; "Some young fellow will get terribly fooled with that Mother Hubbard dress."

Judge Foster, Secretary of the Treasury, died last week.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.

Are you disturbed at night and broken out of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup For Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhoea, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflamation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. A LOVER'S SONG.

A lover's song, accept it pray,
Tho' very little, but they say
By small things men show they are great,
And if you love thus estimate,
Then greater mine for this singing.

But Chloe, where I Corydon sing
With ornaments and roundelay,
I'd pipe for you, the flocks should eat
A lover's song
Between those lips a [illegible] betray
Fritters to me— There, if it may,
Prevent combat. I ope the gate
And trembling, fearful of its fate,
I send it with this leaf of bay
A lover's song.

H. C. FAULKNER.

Woman's Faith.

They were lovers. All the romance and sentiment of the world was theirs. There is something unfathomable in this thing called love. It tyrannizes over body and soul as no other feeling can. It creates happiness from the greatest sorrow, light from the deepest darkness. It builds such castles as money cannot buy, and it binds stronger than any chains forged by human hands.

Through her tears as they parted shone such a light of love that he almost dared call her wife. She knew that she was loved in return, and that knowledge created a faith in her heart which was to endure even to the gates of Heaven and beyond.

"In a year!" he whispered as he left her.

And she answered:

"I will wait a year—a lifetime!"

When a year had passed and no word came from him they tried to shake her faith by creating doubts. Men had no constancy, they sneered; men would wring a woman's heart and have no pity. Tears came to her brown eyes, but again she answered:

"He will come back to me!"

When the one year had become five the old sailors in the taverns and lofts shook their heads and said to each other that the ship had surely been lost and that the young captain would never be heard of more. Wives felt a pity for the heart longing and waiting through such uncertainty, and they whispered that it would be no sin to love again.

"I shall see him again—he will surely return!" was the answer of Faith, with her sorrowful face and aching heart.

The five years became ten. The brown hair was streaked with gray, and the girl's fair face had become the face of a woman who carries a sobbing, wailing misery in her heart. Men showed their cruelty by seeking to awaken a new love; women exhibited their bitterness of heart toward their own sex by ridiculing her faith. But the light of a never-dying heroism burned in her eyes as she answered them:

"He gave me his promise—I am watching for his ship."

And the ten years became twenty. Men and women had gone to their last rest until scarcely one was left who remembered when the lost ship sailed or who was her captain. But there were children who had heard the story, and as they smoothed down the gray hairs with their soft hands, they whispered:

"It is so sad! And he was lost at sea?"

"Lost!" she answered. "Aye! even though the whole world told me so, I would wait and watch for him!"

And the twenty years became thirty. One night when the storm-vexed sea lashed the shore in fury and men uttered brief prayers to God as they turned their faces upon the ships making a brave fight for life, Faith lay dying.

The end had come. A human heart, troubled and bruised and scarred by waiting in vain—by hoping, to be ever disappointed—was about to be stilled. For a moment the storm lulled, just as a man draws a long breath before dashing into some great peril. As it screamed and roared again in its vengeance, Faith lifted her thin hand and whispered:

"He is coming back to me! I shall see him again and hear his voice once more!"

The nurse moved nearer and whispered kind words, but Faith waived her aside and cried out:

"Do not come between us! I hear his footsteps—he is here! I loved him, and my reward has come at last! Let me clasp his hand—let me look into his eyes!"

And again the storm lulled, until the gale died into sobs and whispers, and the roar of the surf sounded miles away. Before the fury gathered itself for a fresh attack, two spirits passed out of the old house hand in hand and were also on the path to Heaven. She had listened, and his footfalls had echoed in her ears. She had watched, and her glazed eyes had at last been gladdened. She had waited, and he had come to be with her through the perils of the dark valley.

The First Editor.

In Retrospections of the Stage a writer tells this story: The evening before we started Mr. Coleman, editor of the Evening Post, dropped in to chat for an hour or two in his usual friendly way; but at length, pulling out his watch, rose in haste, saying he had an appointment to which he must attend. I asked him if he would not call on us in the morning before we left.

"Why," he replied pleasantly, "I don't really know, my good friend. I should like to."

"Well," said I, "we shall not go very early and if you are awake—"

"Oh," he interrupted in the same pleasant tone, "depend on it, if I'm awake I'll drop in to see you."

In the morning we saw no Mr. Coleman, but a week after I was informed that he had fought a duel with some gentleman of New York on the very day in question and that he had in fact sat in my parlor and conversed with us till within half an hour of the appointed time, which pleasantly enough accounted for the ambiguity of his parting expression.

THE LAST VISIT TO AMERICA.

The Cholera Epidemic of 1873 [illegible] one as to Europe.

Dr. John T. Nyland the last appearance of Vital Stork in the United States was 1873, when the disease prevailed throughout the Mississippi Valley, but did not reach the Eastern or Middle States. The first cases of cholera that year were noticed early in the summer in New Orleans, and the disease was carried northward rapidly. It caused much excitement, and there was an extended discussion among physicians regarding its nature. Most of the physicians who were engaged in checking the advance of the scourge declared that the disease was Asiatic cholera, of foreign origin. Others called it American cholera, and said that the disease was not epidemic but endemic, having its origin in local or malarial influences.

Upward of 4,000 persons died from the disease and more than double that number recovered from it. Complete records of 7,356 cases were obtained by Government officials. An official inquiry into the methods adopted by physicians in treating cholera patients brought to notice a large number of mixtures, in which opium, camphor and mercury were principal ingredients. Each mixture had for its champion some physician who had used it with alleged wonderful results. Hot and cold external applications were used to cure some patients, and other sufferers recovered after being bled by doctors of the Old School. A reporter asked Dr. Janes, Assistant Sanitary Superintendent, what remedy for cholera is considered the best at present.

Dr. Janes replied: "It would not be best to prescribe any particular remedy for use in all classes of cholera. There are several remedies for acute diarrhœa which may be useful in case of cholera, to give temporary relief to a patient until a physician can be summoned. Complete rest and warm external applications will be found to give some relief. No time should be lost in procuring the services of a physician, whose treatment may vary according to the progress which the disease has made. A mistake made in the treatment of cholera by an ignorant person may be more fatal than the disease."

Twins Astonish Judge and Jury.

The Augusta (Me.) Journal, says:—At a trial in Augusta the other day, before Judge Whitehouse, the case being a family quarrel between disgruntled heirs, among the witnesses for the defense were twins. They had hair of the brightest auburn, eyebrows the color of flax, pink and white complexions, and dresses exactly alike, even to the least important bow. Their names even were exactly alike, with the single exception that an "a" appeared in one of their names instead of an "o." When the first appeared on the stand the jury, Judge, and lawyers regarded her attentively; she gave her testimony in a modest manner and stepped down. Another name was called; it was that of her twin sister. As her counterfeit presentment quietly took the stand there was a hush in the court room. Judge, jury, lawyers and spectators sat transfixed, and gazed first at the witness in the box and then at the place where her sister had taken her seat.

They could hardly believe their eyes it seemed as if the last witness had returned to the box without being recalled. The lawyer conducting the cross-examination put the usual questions; the name and residence were, to all appearances, the same in the case of her double just on the stand, her voice precisely the same in tone and inflection. The jury looked at each other and seemed ready to match coppers as to whether they were awake or not. Then the lawyer asked the witness if she had been on the stand before during the trial, and received a quiet answer in the negative. This satisfied the court, although if her twin sister had not sat in plain view at the other end of the court room it is by no means certain that she would not have been indicted for perjury.

Love in Kentucky.

The god of love and the god of war met on the highway near Millersburg, Kentucky on a Sunday after Church. The god of hospitality had also a hand in the affair. Miss Wells, daughter of a Georgetown, Ky., banker, was visiting a friend in a neighboring town. There was a party and other merrymaking at the friend's house, when one Milton Smith, a clerk in the Wells bank, put in an appearance, joining in the festivities. A drive was proposed for Sunday afternoon, in which Miss Wells, Mr. Smith, and Miss Thomas, daughter of the hostess, joined. After driving half a mile it was proposed that they should all go to Ohio and see Mr. Smith and Miss Wells married. This was a surprise to Miss Thomas, who declined to accompany the party any further. She was allowed to descend from the carriage, and she walked home and related the incident to her mother. Calling to her aid three young men, who hastily seized their revolvers, Mrs. Thomas started in pursuit. They overtook the marriage party after a brisk run of an hour, and immediately opened fire on them, which was vigorously returned. "More than a dozen shots were exchanged," but without any other effect than to wound Mrs. Thomas's horses, and to frighten that good woman so that she begged the young man to take her home. Victory perched on the banner of Hymen. The fugitives have not been heard of since, but it is supposed that they reached the Ohio shore and were married. All the parties engaged in the shooting, except possibly the bridegroom belonged to the most respectable families.

The Japanese call a dog cart a "jin-rik-sha." They have no word in their language for the dude who drives the cart.

A LITTLE LOOSE ADVICE

GIVEN—BUT SPOKEN IT IS NO GOOD WHILE IT IS LOCKED UP.

A Young Man Told What It Is Best for Him to do in the Great Game of Life if He would Succeed.

Yes, my son, there are men who, in the morning of their lives, the brightest, strongest, bravest days they have to live, go through various courses, and come out reformed, and all right at last. There are some men who do this. Once in a while you will find one, and you think you will do just as he did.

But the hundred or the thousand men who started in with him and never got through! The swimmers who plunged into that turbulent sea of dissipation and recklessness with him, and never gained the shore again, but went down in the combing billows and the yeasty breakers! How about them? Aren't you more than likely to be one of the multitude, then you are to be the exception?

I tell you, my boy, ten young fellows of your age may embark together in the prodigal business, with good capital and the usual stock of red paint for municipal decorative purposes; their hands are steady, their brains are clear, their hearts are brave, and they are ambitious and hopeful and earnest; they only want to have their racket and see the town before they settle down to hard, steady work. They are not going to be drunkards. They're all right; they don't believe in this sort of thing at all, but they are young, and it's quiet on the farm with nobody but the old folks and the elder brother, and they want to travel and see the world a little before they become good citizens, props of society, and pillars of the church. And by and by, when the State and society and the church wants them and needs them, we look for the ten and they are not found, returning to give glory to God for mercy and saving strength and cheering grace, save the stranger, the Samaritan. And we ask, "Where are the nine?"

My dear boy, there is more hope for the stranger, for the street waif, born in the haunts of vice and walking in its ways all his life, than there is for the young man, who, born in the light and taught in the ways of uprightness, deliberately turns his back upon wisdom and virtue, and intelligently makes vice his choice. The stranger, charmed with a purity and health and cleanliness so new and beautiful to him, comes back; but the nine, my son?

Now, my boy, be sensible in this matter. You say, "Oh, well, I'll take the chances on it." Well, now, that's all right. Come, you and I are men of the world, we are reasonable men, we'll "take the chances on it." That's all I ask you to do. Just "take the chances on it" as you do on the horse-race, the turn of a card, on the election, on the prize-fight, the regatta, the walking match. Just give your moral conduct, your higher life, your character, your good name, your hopes and ambitions an even show with the horse-race and draw-poker and the slugging match. I won't even ask you to do better than that. Just give them a fair field and no favor, and may the best one win.

At the horse-race do you deliberately buy one chance in ten, in the pools? Do you put your money on the horse that has a record of ten races, nine of which he has lost? True, you back the favorite against the field sometimes, but the favorite isn't the horse with the losing record. You don't draw to a poker hand that you know won't fill once in ten times; not if you can just as well draw to something that is a dead sure thing nine times out of ten. You don't bet on the last man in the walking-match. Of course, in all games of chance and athletic contests and games of skill—and they all go in the same boat in these days—the chances are always against you, but you don't select the worst ones, do you? Now be honest, and give yourself as good a chance in life as you do at the horse-race.

And then—getting tired? Well, just one word, and I'll let you go. In three card monte, in the poker room, at the faro bank, at the horse-race, at the walking match, in the grand lottery, in the little bunco scheme, who "take the chances?" Honest, now, "who take the chances?" Yes, my son, the bettors every time; the pool buyers; the people in the grand stand, the ticket holders, the visitors from the country, the fools. And who rake in the pile? Who gather the stamps? You are correct; the dealer, the bunco steerer, the managers of the lottery, the poker sharp. They don't "take the chances," my son. They are "children of this world" who "are in their generation wiser than the children of light." They do not "take the chances." They let you and me "take the chances" and they "take the pot." You may go, my son. Have some sense. Not too much. You needn't burden yourself with more than you can manage. A few grains of sense is as much as most men need, and more. Oh, tons more than a great many men have.

Preserving Peaches.

A good way to preserve the small early peaches which are not suitable for canning is to peel them, and to eight pounds of fruit add three pounds of light brown sugar. Scatter the sugar over the peaches and let them stand for a few hours, then you will not be obliged to add a drop of water to them. Let them cook slowly until they look clear, and can be pierced easily with a broom splint; then spread them on plates and put them in the sun to dry. There will be a thick syrup left in the kettle, which may be boiled a few minutes after the fruit is taken out and poured over the fruit on the plates. When the peaches are dry pack them in jars with powdered sugar scattered over each layer. The jars must be carefully covered so that it will be impossible for the smallest fly to enter.

How a Salt Well is Worked.

The stratum of salt having been once pierced, a saturated solution of the saline matter frequently rises in the boring to within eighty feet of the surface. This, however, cannot always be depended upon—and here centre the increased difficulty and expense. When a few dozen feet have been drilled, a six or an eight-inch iron pipe is inserted as a "casing." Inside of this a two-inch pipe—also of iron—is placed. The "casing head" has two openings—one for the entrance of pure water from a neighboring spring into the larger pipe, at the lower end of which it becomes saturated with saline matter; the other at the end of the smaller pipe to allow the expulsion of brine. Of course, the wells become foul and leaky at times and then resort is had to torpedoes of nitro-glycerine, which are sent down to the bottom of the "casing," and after them is sent an iron weight which secures the explosion. The rusting of the "casing" is the great enemy of the salt worker; and when his engine cannot lift the mass of rusted iron a "knife" cuts the rusted metal and the engine tears it away piecemeal. But the salt wells are exempt from any danger of taking fire, and it is never necessary, as in the case of oil wells, to shoot off the "casing head" with a cannon ball.

After the brine has once reached the surface it is forced into large reservoirs, whence it is drawn off through "string" after "string" of "covers," until solar evaporation has left the coarser grades of salt. The "covers" or vats are usually 16 by 18 feet, and the product of each one per year is estimated at 150 bushels, while the product at Syracuse, N. Y., is only about half that quantity. It is also claimed that the slope of the valley at Warsaw is peculiarly adapted to rapid evaporation by the sun. When the finer grades of salt are wanted the brine is led from the reservoirs to an evaporating pan, where a gentle heat is applied. Similar treatment in another pan completes the process, and the residuum of the salt is raked upon a shelf at the side of the evaporator. After a slight draining it is taken to the bins, where a more thorough draining is allowed for the space of three weeks.—Popular Science Monthly.

Teach the Children to Think.

Strength of mind is not equivalent to perfect balance of judgment or evenness of power. As a rule, specially strong-minded persons are given to single ideas which are held with great tenacity. Inventors represent this as well as advocates of particular ideas.

What is called strength of mind is the result of independent thinking. Hence its basis is thought. The first element toward it is inducing the young to think. Hence even incorrect thinking should not be rudely reproved, but kindly and gently corrected. Every encouragement should be given children to think. Thought stimulates thought, hence living ideas put before children in the home circle, at table or elsewhere has its value in this direction. On the other hand, the rude repression of an unguarded or incorrect thought is injurious. Encouragement to hold fast to an idea till it is disproven is another step in this form of education. The mere circumstance that some one does not agree with it proves nothing. Nor does it follow that the disagreement of an older person is to be accepted as final. Before an idea or opinion is abandoned it should be satisfactorily seen to be wrong. The moment one accepts or abandons a thought or opinion at the ipse dixit of another they betray weakness. Leadership is one thing and dominancy another. It is well, if we have not the qualities of leadership, to be willing to be led; but to have our minds dominated and controlled is another and entirely different thing. The important lesson to impart to children is that of sound, independent thought. And if it lead to strong-mindedness—that is, tenacity of opinion—it is well, provided opinions be carefully and thoughtfully formed.

The Country's Commerce.

A LARGE INCREASE FOR THE YEAR, BOTH IN EXPORTS AND IMPORTS.

Mr. Nimmo, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, at Washington, transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury his report on the foreign commerce of the United States for the month of June, 1884, and for the year ended June 30, 1884. It appears from the statement that the balance of trade in favor of the United States during the last fiscal year was $72,798,907, as against a balance in our favor during the year ended June 30, 1883, of $100,658,498. The total value of the exports of merchandise during the fiscal year just closed amounted to $740,513,580, as against $823,839,402 during the preceding fiscal year, a falling off of $83,825,842. The imports of merchandise amounted to $667,714,563, as against $793,180,914 during the preceding fiscal year, a falling off of $55,466,351.

The decrease in the total value of exports of domestic merchandise during the year ended June 30, 1884, was due chiefly to the falling off in the exports of cotton, manufactures of cotton, wheat, wheat flour, hops, tobacco and manufactures of tobacco, and fruits. There was, however, during the fiscal year just closed a marked increase in the exports of cattle, oils, provisions, copper and manufactures of copper, rye and corn. The decrease in the total value of imports during the year ended June 30, 1884, was largely due to the falling off in the values of the imports of iron and steel manufactures thereof, cotton manufactures, hides and skins, breadstuffs, tea, wines, flax, hemp and jute and manufactures thereof, earthen, stone, and china ware, leather and manufactures of leather, all works subject to duty, manufactures of wool, tops, and tobacco and manufactures thereof. There was, however, a considerable increase in the values of imports of sugar and molasses and of coffee.

You Can't Make $500 by Reading This, even if you have chronic nasal catarrh in its worst stages, for although this amount of reward has for many years been offered by the proprietors of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, for any case of catarrh they cannot cure, yet notwithstanding that thousands use the Remedy they are seldom called upon to pay the reward, and when they have been so called upon they have universally found that the failure to cure was wholly due to some overlooked complication, usually easily removed by a slight modification of the treatment. Therefore, if this should meet the eye of anybody who has made faithful trial of this great and world-famed Remedy without receiving a perfect and permanent cure therefrom, that person will do well to either call or write to the proprietors, the World's Dispensary Medical Association, of Buffalo, N. NEAR, YET FAR.

So near! and yet, I think, as far apart
As heaven from hell, high noon from darkest night,
Or buried face from longing lover's sight;
I dream of you and then from dreams I start
To hear the beatings of my own sad heart,
That snatched from dreams impossible plight,
But quickly wakes again in wretched delight,
To meet the day's keen pain and ceaseless smart.
How shall I comfort, then, my lonesome years,
Since dreams are dim and sleeping-time is brief?
For very full I am of restless fears,
Blown to and fro, as is a vagrant leaf;
And well I know how idle are the tears
That burn my aching eyes, yet mock my grief.

LOUISE CHANDLER MOULTON.

Sacramento.

It was an odd name for a girl—Sacramento.

So the girl herself thought as she stooped down beside a spring at the foot of a cotton-wood tree and lazily dropped her pail into the water.

"It ought to have been given to a boy, if it was a fit name to give to anybody," she said quite aloud. "But I'm more boy than girl, anyway."

This fact was added rather bitterly, as she looked at her brown, rough hands and her bare ankle, and thought of the "boy's work" she had to do.

And it was hard to believe that this was the best kind of life for a young girl like Sacramento. Here she lived alone, for her father was down at the mouth of the canyon all day. The garden work she was obliged to do, and the care of the garden fell upon her. It was not often that she saw any person but her father, although now and then, in spite of herself, she came in contact with the rude men of the mining camp up above.

Yet Sacramento had her dream, one that she "scarcely dared to own," but it came to her often as she went about her work.

She knew that down at Santa Barbara and in the towns along the coast, and far, far away across wide stretches of continent to the great East, there were girls who lived very different from her life, and she dreamed of such a life for herself.

"Oh, if I could only go away from here!" she cried out, almost as one cries out for help. "If I could only go down to San Francisco and go to school there for a single year. Ah, if I had $500."

Suddenly there was a step—not a man, but of a horse—on the bank behind her, and then some one spoke. She knew the voice without looking up. It was Pete Larrabee, a fellow who lived down on Hahneman's plantation, two miles along the trail. He sometimes rode by. He had not heard her last words at all; yet, strangely enough his own words were a repetition of them.

"Five hundred dollars, Sac," said he; "$500 in gold! D'ye want ter earn it? Ther's yer chance," and he threw down to her a bit of paper crumpled into a ball.

She picked it up, and, slowly unfolding it, ran her eyes over the contents,

$500 REWARD.

The above amount will be paid for information leading to the arrest, dead or alive, of Walter Somers, who has worked for some time past on Maxwell's ranch. Said Somers is about 18 years old and five and a half feet high, rather good looking, with light, curly hair, blue eyes and a light mustache. When last seen he had on a black slouch hat, gray business suit and blue flannel shirt and boots with red tops marked with the maker's name.

The name of the county sheriff was signed at the bottom of the bill. Sacramento, having glanced it through, looked up.

"He's been a stealin' hosses!" exclaimed Pete. "Got off last night with four of Maxwell's best, somewheres. That reward won't do much good, though. The regulators'll lame him and string him up 'fore the law'll git started. They are hayin' a mectin' now up at the gulch. I tell ye they are mad. They'll make quick work if they ketch him. Yer father's there. He needn't look for him home afore night, mebbe."

Then, after a word or two more the man rode on, and presently Sacramento took up her pail, and with the sheriff's bill still in her hand, went slowly up the bank and across the trail toward the house, thinking very seriously about the $500 all the while.

It was some hours after this, and the afternoon sun was going down behind the tops of the mountains, that Sacramento, having finished her housework was preparing to sit down on the porch to do her sewing, when she was met in the doorway by a young man whom she had never seen before. And yet he was no stranger. The girl knew him instantly, although the slouch hat was pulled down over the fierce hair and blue eyes, and the gray pants, torn and muddy, had been drawn out of the boot legs so as to no longer allow the red tops of the boots with the maker's name to be seen. It was the horse thief.

She did not, however, express any surprise on after saw him. She was accustomed to the sight of rough, evil men; and at the first glance she had felt that this one would not be either very wicked or very dangerous. He was not very much more than a lad and had an air of gentleness and good breeding about him that six months of Western life and the plight he was in at that moment had by no means destroyed. He seemed to be short of breath, too, and was trembling as if he had been running.

Instinctively he raised his hand toward his head, and then, bethinking himself, dropped it again.

"Could you give me something to eat and drink?" he asked, in a hesitating voice. "Anything will do, I am very hungry. I—I have had nothing to eat since last night."

"Come in," said Sacramento gravely. In her voice there was neither kindness nor unkindness, she trying to realise the situation she was in. "Come in and sit down!"

Then she went into a closet near by, and began taking down milk and bread and meat, as she slowly did so turning the matter over in her mind. Here was this man who had been stealing horses, and for whose capture $500 was offered, in her own kitchen. Five hundred dollars! Exactly the sum she had been wishing for—the sum that would take her down to San Francisco to school and make a lady of her. And this sum may be hers if she could in some way secure this stranger or somehow keep him in the house until help arrived. Help! Why she hardly needed help. He was weak and exhausted, and in the drawer of the kitchen table there was a loaded revolver, which she well knew how to use.

She came out presently, and set the things before him, bringing also the teapot from the stove and pouring for him a cup of tea. Then she went and sat down by the window, and watched him furtively as he ate.

In spite of his caution, he had taken off his hat while he was eating. She could better see what he was like. It was almost a boyish face, worn, but not wicked, with the curling hair lying in dark clusters upon his pale brow. In the hands, small and well shaped, and in all his motions and manner, she felt that she could read something of his story. She had heard before this how young lads in the East, filled with romantic notions about Western life and adventure, sometimes left their luxurious homes and found their way out to the ranches of the Pacific. Perhaps he was one of these.

As she looked at him, fancying all this, and realising the terrible strait he was in and the probable dark fate that was before him, her heart yearned with true womanly sympathy, and her feeling found expression before she was able to restrain herself.

"Oh, how could you do it? How could you do it?" she suddenly exclaimed, her voice quite full of what she felt.

He looked up at her in wonder; but as his eyes met hers he understood her.

"I didn't do it. Upon my honor I did not," he said. "It was that man Dennis." Sacramento breathed a great sigh of relief. Horse stealing was held in that section to be a crime worse than murder; and she was by no means free from the popular estimate of grave nature.

"Oh, I am glad of that!" cried she. "But——" she hesitated, and then went on doubtfully, "But, then, how was it? Why did you run away?"

"It was Dennis' doings, their laying it to me. He did that to clear himself. And after that you know as well as I do that there would have been no use in trying to prove myself innocent. They always hang a horse thief first and then consider his guilt afterward. I had to run to save my life."

"Do you know that there is a reward offered for your capture?"

"I know that the regulators are after me," answered the young man sullenly. "They came near catching me, too, this noon. I just escaped them, and came down the canyon by the mountain trail. I have had a hard run for it, and what with no sleep for twenty-four hours, I am about used up. I felt as though I could not go another step when I saw your house. Now—you have been very good to me. I shall never forget——"

"But what are you going to do now?" interrupted Sacramento. "You are not safe here."

"I know it. But I threw them off the track this noon, and I do not think they are within five miles of me. Now, I have had something to eat, I will take to the woods again. I hope I may get clear away. If I don't," his voice trembled and tears came into his eyes, "if I don't I shall get a hanging, I suppose. Oh, what a fool I was not to provide for home to this sort of thing! And yet, I wouldn't care so much, either, if it wasn't for my poor father and mother." And there the poor fellow fairly broke down.

"Hark!" Sacramento exclaimed. She had been crying, too.

They both listened. In a moment they both heard plainly the sound of horses coming down the trail. The girl turned with instant self-possession:

"Go in there! Quick! Quick! There is not a moment to lose. Here, take your hat!"

After handing his hat to him she half pushed him across the room and into her own little room that led off from it. Then she hurriedly finished clearing the table again, barely finishing the task as the horsemen halted at the door.

There were three of them. One was her father. Sacramento knew the other two men by sight. They were rough, but of the better sort of those who made up the dwellers of Kelly Gulch. The faces of all three were hard and forbidding, and they evidently had been riding hard. They dismounted together.

"Sac," began her father, as he entered the door, "hev you seen anything of a young chap afoot or a horseback coming this way?"

Sacramento had expected the question and was ready for it. And she meant, if possible, to answer without a lie.

"A young chap about eighteen years of age, and about five feet and a half high, rather good looking, and with red top boots?" replied she.

"Yes! yes! That's him!" cried one of the other men. "Has he been here?"

"I was only quoting from this handbill," said Sacramento, taking the paper from the shelf where she had laid it.

"Then you hain't seen him at all?" asked her father.

"I have been right here all day, and nobody has gone by except Pete Larrabee. It was he who gave me the bill. Are you sure that he came this way—the—the horse thief?"

"No; but we didn't know but he might. The chances is that he is sloped off to the mountains, meanin' to go through Stovepipe pass. They'll get him though, afore sundown."

"It's sundown now," observed Sacramento.

"Then they've got him now," was the sententious response. "And we shall be too late for the hangin' of we sh'd go back. Leastways"—this was added to his companions—"you'd better come in and have a bite afore you go."

So presently the three men sat down to the supper that the young girl quickly prepared for them. And while they were eating, she herself, at her father's bidding, went out to take the saddle off Bueno, his horse, and give him feed. As she approached the door once more, a few minutes after, she heard words which caused her to stop and listen.

"I don't like ter say anything against thet kid o' yourn, neighbor," one of the men was saying, "but it hes kinder seemed to me all ther while's though she sorter hed some'at on her mind like. Ye don't s'pose she knows anything 'bout that young feller arter all?"

Sacramento's father laughed at this, as though it was too absurd to be considered.

The other, however, was not to be laughed out of his suspicions.

"For all we know, she may hev hid him somewhere on the premmysis."

"It's easy enough to see," said the proprietor of the said "premmysis," testily. "Where d'ye think she's hid him? In her bed-room?"

As he said this, Sacramento, who was now near enough to see into the kitchen, saw her father rise from his chair and step to the door of the room where she had concealed the fugitive. Her heart almost stopped beating as she saw him push open the door and enter the room, followed by his companion.

"We'll make a clus search of it while we're about it," she heard him say within.

And then she stood there in terrible suspense on the porch, expecting every instant to hear the shout that would follow the discovery of the fugitive.

But no such shout was heard, and instead of it, a moment later the two men came out again, her father still laughing at his friends.

What could it mean? Had the young man been able to conceal himself in the room and so evade their search? That was not possible. Then she thought of the window. Could he have escaped from the room by that? The window was so small she could scarcely believe that he could have crept through it, and yet he must have done so.

She went hurriedly to the back of the house and then down beyond the horse sheds. No one could be seen. She halted a moment under a live oak tree just at the edge of the garden. The evening was very calm and still, and the twilight shadows were deepening fast. Was it the rustling of the wind in the boughs overhead that caught her ear? She listened.

"Hist! I am here—in the tree."

The words came in a distinct whisper from directly above her.

Then she went hurriedly to the house. The three men were still sitting at the table and Sacramento felt rather than saw that one of them still regarded her suspiciously as she came in. She did not speak to them at all, but went directly through the kitchen to her own room, and in a moment more came out, went about her work in the kitchen and took up a pail, apparently to go to the spring for water.

"Ten minutes later, standing in the shadow of the cotton-wood, young Somers heard a step, and then Sacramento, leading Bueno all saddled and bridled, appeared. He started forward.

"Hush!" she said: "they may come at any moment. Listen to what I say. Your life depends on it. You must ride straight down the trail for a quarter of a mile. Then, down by a big cotton-wood, just like this, you will strike a path to the left. Bueno will know it, once you get him in it. It will bring you, not half a mile on, to a wagon road that crosses the swamp. The end of this corduroy has got out of order, and there are some logs laid. Lead Bueno across and then pull the logs away. If you do that it will make trouble for those who follow you. Beyond the swamp is a big plain. Strike straight across it, having the moon square on your right—the moon will be up by that time—and three hours' riding will bring you to the new railroad. After that—God help you to get safe away!"

Sacramento paused and put out her hand. "Can you remember?" she demanded.

"I can, but I can never forget—"

"Never mind that. Here, take this. It is a little money. You will need it. Now mount and ride slowly a little way, and then for your life."

The young man still had a hold of her hand. The tears came into his eyes. The next moment he was gone.

The next morning Sacramento told her father the story and coaxed him into forgiving her. And the following afternoon a man brought Bueno over from the railroad town, and then she knew the fugitive was safe.

Six weeks later a lawyer from Santa Barbara appeared with a letter from Walter Somers. He was with his friends in New York. He begged Sacramento to accept, as a gift of gratitude, at least the amount of the reward that had been offered.

And so it was that she went down to San Francisco to school that winter after all.—Detroit Free Press.

Lincoln and the Office-Seekers.

Ben Perley Poore in his reminiscences says: Mr. Lincoln's prominent adviser, when he first came to Washington in '61, was Mr. Norman B. Judd, a Chicago lawyer, who had served for many years in the Illinois Legislature. He was a short, chunky gentleman with a broad, ruddy face, white hair and beard, dark blue eyes, a hooked nose and rather forcible mouth. He evidently possessed tact, if not talent, and so successfully assumed the position of "the keeper of the king's conscience" that Mr. Seward hastened his departure for Berlin as Minister Plenipotentiary. The invasion of Washington by office-seekers after the inauguration of the Republican administration was wonderful, and the mails brought petitions from thousands of place-hunters who could not urge their claims in person. At the Postoffice Department alone, over fifteen thousand applications for appointment had been placed on file before the last of March. The most disappointed place-hunters who came to Washington were the little town and ward politicians, who, having "worked" in their respective localities, fancied that the whole world, including Mr. Lincoln, must be fully satisfied that but for each of them the Republican party would have been defeated. One village in Pennsylvania sent two rival shopkeepers, each of whom wanted to be postmaster. One based his claims on the fact that he had presented a set of torch-lamps to the village corps of Wide Awakes, while the other demanded the appointment because he had supplied the oil. The question was the relative value of the torch-lamps without the coal oil, or the coal oil without the torch-lamps. Mr. Lincoln finally cut the Gordian knot by reappointing the old postmaster.

The New Army Step.

Col. Emmons Clark, of the New York Seventh Regiment, was asked by a Telegram reporter what he thought of the change of tactics prescribed for the United States Army, especially that which effects the length of step and cadence for marching. The Colonel said that he was not prepared at present to speak at length in regard to the matter, but he was under the impression that the change had met with general disfavor. In fact he had not heard any favorable opinion of it expressed by military men. The experience of two thousand years had taught those interested in such matters that the twenty-eight inch step was the best medium that could be arrived at in a regiment or body of men varying in height from five feet six inches to six feet two inches or more. Even twenty-eight inches was a long stride for a man five feet eight inches and under to keep up for any length of time, and most men of that height had to stretch their legs pretty well in marching. No action would be taken in regard to the matter by the militia of this city till October, when active drilling begins.

English Mechanics.

On the 27th of June a very intelligent party of English workmen landed in New York city. They were bricklayers from Lancashire, and nearly all had their wives and children with them. They represented affairs in the old country, so far as regards their class, as very bad, and said it was difficult to see how they could be any worse. From their statements it appears that bricklayers are paid 20 shillings per week in Lancashire, equal to about $5 American money. This statement shows how much better off mechanics in the building trades are in this country. It is sometimes impossible to appreciate the blessings we enjoy without attention is called to the privileges of the mechanics of the old world.

DEATH OF THOMAS DICKSON.

A Millionaire Canal President who Once Served the Company as Mule Boy.

Thomas Dickson, President of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, who has been ill for some days, died at Morristown, N. J., of heart disease.

Mr. Dickson was born in Scotland in 1824. His father took him to Canada in 1832. In 1834 they went to Susquehanna county, Pennsylvania, where his father entered the service of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company as master mechanic, and in 1837 young Dickson became mule boy. In 1838 he became clerk in a country store, and in 1845 he entered into partnership with Joseph Benjamin in the store business. Seven years later he bought an interest in a machine shop and foundry. In 1856 he moved to Scranton, and started the Dickson Manufacturing Company, which now has a capital of $1,500,000, and turns out locomotives, steam engines, and mining machinery. He was President and manager of the company until 1860, when he retired, and became connected with the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company as superintendent of the coal department. He was General Superintendent of the company in 1864. In 1867 he became Vice-President, and in 1869 President of the company, in which position he has been ever since.

He leased the Albany and Susquehanna and the Rensselaer railroads, and extended the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company's business to New England. He organized the First National Bank of Scranton and the Trust and Savings Bank of the same place. He was a director of the Mutual Life Insurance Company and the Erie Railway, of which he was acting President in the absence of the President in Europe. He was largely interested in coal and iron mines in the United States. He was a trustee of the Lafayette College of Pennsylvania. His fortune is estimated at several millions. He leaves a widow, two married daughters, and two sons.

An Interesting Will Question.

A curious question under a will was decided by the Surrogate at Jamaica, Long Island. It appears that Gardiner H. Wolcott died at Astoria in November, 1881, and was buried in Greenwood Cemetery. He died apparently intestate, and his estate, valued at forty thousand dollars, was duly divided among the heirs. Subsequently a will left by him was found. Its last provision was as follows:—"It is my special command that my remains lie beside those of my darling Nina's, in Greendale Cemetery. Any expense in carrying out this wish will be paid from my estate."

Greendale Cemetery is at Meadville, Pa. The "Nina" referred to was known as Nina Varian, an actress. She was nowhere mentioned in the will as the wife of testator, but there is evidence to show that she was his wife.

This clause of the will was brought before the Surrogate by a recent application of an executor for a sufficient allowance of money to remove the remains of the testator, in compliance with his last request. The application was opposed by the relatives of the deceased, and it was denied by the Surrogate.

There is no question that the provisions of the will could have been carried out had it been discovered before the burial of the testator. But the Surrogate now refuses the application because of delay on the part of the executives and on the ground that "the direction of a court should not be sought to authorize the executors to incur an additional expense when the immediate parties interested in the estate will have to be called upon to bear their proportionate shares of such expenses while they at the same time are strongly protesting against the removal of the remains."—New York Herald.

Lead Roofs.

With reference to the durability of lead roofs one of our subscribers draws attention to a statement that occurs in the letter of a foreign correspondent of one of the daily papers, writing about the Tower of London. The White Tower was built by William the Conqueror. It is a quadrangular structure 116 feet by 96 feet and 92 feet high. The external walls are 15 feet in thickness. It has a lead roof and was built in the year 1070. Accordingly, argues the writer quoted, it has stood upward of 800 years and is said to be in excellent condition at the present time. This writer's statements, it may be remarked, are not altogether satisfactory. It is possible that the roof in question has been repaired in the time mentioned, if not wholly replaced one or more times. We speak simply from the probabilities of the case and not from absolute knowledge. The fact that the building was erected 800 years ago and covered with a lead roof is hardly proof that lead roofs last 800 years.

The daily product of paper at Holyoke is closely estimated at the enormous amount of one hundred and seventy-seven tons. A large part of the product is due writing and book papers. More than $5,000,000 is invested in the business, which gives employment to between four thousand and five thousand hands.

FARM AND GARDEN.

ORCHARD AND FRUIT GARDEN.—Decide whether to dispose of surplus and inferior fruit by making it into vinegar or by drying or evaporating it. Trees will be broken by careless pickers; saw off all injured limbs. The appleworm may be diminished by picking up and destroying fallen fruit or allowing the pigs to do it. Bands of carpet, bagging or other fabric, fastened around the trunks of apple trees with a single long tack, will catch many apple worms. Examine weekly and kill. If trees set last spring suffer from drouth, mulch them, or keep the soil loose. The fall web worm spins its nest in summer also. At its first appearance cut away the twig to which the nest is attached and crush the worms. Young trees may have their shape controlled by pinching the ends of shoots that grow too vigorously. When the blackberry and raspberry crops are off cut away the canes that have borne fruit. The new stems of blackberries should be stopped when five feet high, those of raspberries at three or four feet. Keep strawberry beds free of weeds. Plant new beds with plants rooted in pots. Whitish spots on the under side of grape leaves are mildew. Dust sulphur with a sulphur bellows at once. Large caterpillars and beetles must be hand-picked. Continue to pinch laterals.—Agriculturist.

CARE OF MEADOWS.—A farmer visiting me last spring remarked: "I cannot understand how you wintered so much stock, when you had only six acres of grass to cut. I kept about three times as much stock as you did and mowed over just ten times as much land." By this time our "Walks and Talks" had brought us to the six acres which is to be mowed this year. "You have been rolling this," he said, "No," I replied, "it looks as though it had been rolled, but those are the swaths of of the 6-foot mower used to cut the rowen last fall after wheat. We had almost two loads per acre of pretty good hay." "Well, now I begin to understand," said he; "I wondered, if you had wheat there last year, what had become of the stubble. But, my friend, I cannot do such a thing as that. Grass will not grow like that for me."

Knowing that it would if it had a fair chance, I began to question him to find out where the trouble was. I found that he carefully saved the manure made on his farm, and used it to good advantage. His rotation was a good one, and he was well supplied with improved tools, and was in the habit of using them freely. But the trouble came out at last; he let his stock run on the meadows and wheat stubble in the fall always, and sometimes, when he was short of hay in the spring. Now, in his case, as I frankly told him, this was probably the main reason why he was short of hay; why he had to mow over 60 acres to get what might have been grown on 20 acres. No man could think of turning his stock on his wheat or corn or oats, although they might endure to be gnawed off and trampled on for a time and afterward make part of a crop. We give them mellow ground to grow on, protected from the trampling of stock, and from being bitten off and injured while they were young and tender. Why not treat the growing grass as well? Why not give it the best possible chance to grow and yield large crops of hay instead of abusing it in every way? The grass lot, if properly used—if given a fair chance—will yield about as much net profit as any field of the farm oftentimes, although the money does not come as directly, perhaps, as from the wheat or potato crop.

Why is it that so many farmers still allow their cattle to pick and trample on their grass grounds (and pastures are often injured as well as mowing lots) during the fall and winter and spring? It is partly, perhaps, because they do not realize that they are losing by the practice; partly to save work—they do not keep help enough to run the farm to its full capacity—and partly because they have "too many irons in the fire." They are "over-busy farmers."—T. B. Terry, in the Country Gentleman.

The Tidal Wave at Milwaukee.

The tidal wave which came in from Lake Michigan lately, and which "caused the Milwaukee River suddenly to assume a counter current at the rate of one and a quarter miles an hour," can be only ascribed to the effect of the storm centre then passing to the eastward. The wind was brisk and from a southerly point during the afternoon. A similar "tidal wave" was reported as observed on July 21, 1883, in Little Traverse Bay, during the passage of a storm. The probability in this case was that the water in the lake was pushed ahead of the storm, the wave oscillation amounting to about four feet. There is no reason to suppose that such waves are periodical phenomena, though by some coincidence like intervals between their occurrence may have been observed.—New York Herald.

THE FIRST STEAMSHIP.

Reminiscences of the Savannah's Trip Across the Atlantic in 1819.

It is now sixty-five years ago since the first steam vessel successfully crossed the Atlantic Ocean. To America belongs the credit of this primary undertaking. The ship that accomplished this feat was the Savannah. She left Savannah, Ga., on May 26, 1819, and reached Liverpool on June 16, making the passage in twenty-two days; she was propelled solely by sails on four out of the twenty-two days.

The Savannah was purchased in New York city in 1818, by Mr. Scarborough, of Savannah, Ga. She was then on the stocks and was being fitted out especially to test the practicability of a steam vessel in navigating the ocean. Previous to that time and even for many years subsequently the Baltimore clippers were noted for their fast trips and surpassed all rivals. The Savannah was built in New York by Messrs. Crocker & Ficket, and her engines were made in Elizabethtown, N. J. She was a vessel of about 350 tons burden. Mr. Scarborough engaged as engineer Captain Moses Rogers, who had made a study of Fulton's experiment. Captain Stevens Rogers, of New London, Conn., took command of the Savannah and navigated her on the initial trip. She first left this port on a trial trip to Savannah on March 27, 1818, and from there, as above stated, proceeded to Liverpool. From the latter place the Savannah went to Copenhagen, Stockholm, St. Petersburg, Cronstadt and Arunnel. Leaving the latter port she steamed back to Savannah, making the return passage in twenty-five days. Captain Stevens Rogers died in New London in 1878. The log book of the Savannah was presented to the Navy Department in 1848.

This first success was not immediately followed up. Ten years elapsed before a second venture was made with the Curacoa, an English built vessel which made several trips between Holland and the West Indies. Nearly ten years more passed away before steam became a constant and assured fact in transatlantic voyages. In 1838 the Sirius left London and the Great Western left Bristol for New York. The former crossed the Atlantic in nineteen days, and the latter in eighteen days. In the same year was originated the Cunard line and on July 4, 1840, the first vessel of that line (the Britannia) sailed from Liverpool. The company began with four vessels. The Collins line started soon after the Cunard.

A Beautiful Snow Slide.

The Denver, Col., News says: One of the grandest snow slides that ever occurred in Colorado took place a few days ago just back of the Upper Twin Lakes. Judge Harian, an eyewitness, says it was the most sublime sight he ever witnessed. Just back of Twin Lakes are Pomeroy, Gordon and Francis Gulches, on each side of which the mountains rise thousands of feet. The sides of these giants of the Rockies had been covered during the heavy and protracted storms with an enormous depth of snow, until the weight had become such that it could be sustained no longer. The judge says that, as it happened, he was standing where he could see the avalanche perfectly. All at once his ears were greeted with a low, rumbling sound that seemed like the roar of a distant storm, and almost simultaneously an immense volume of snow began to move down the mountain side in one of the gulches toward the road. The agitation seemed to break loose the snow from its moorings in the other two gulches, and almost before one had time to think hundreds of acres of snow were coming down the mountain with a roar like thunder, and filling the air with spray as they tore through the trees and carried everything before them. As they descended their velocity increased until the rapidity with which the great field of snow and debris came down was something terrific. The distance, he says, must have been a mile from where the avalanche started to the valley where it stopped. So deep was the snow that a grove of quaking asp, whose trees were from twenty to forty feet high, was completely buried from sight. Logs a foot and a half in thickness, that lay in the way of the slide, were snapped in two like straws; trees that were too tall to be covered up were torn from their rooted place in the mountain sides and carried like leaves with the avalanche. The velocity of air produced by the avalanche blew down trees that were clear outside of the slide. Fortunately, no one was in the way and no lives were lost.

CHILTON VIEW.

Published Every Thursday Morning.

CLANTON, ALA., SEPT. 11, 1884.

The Republican Nominate.

A convention composed of a few disgruntled Independents and Radicals met in convention in Montgomery last week and nominated a candidate for congress in this district in the person of W. C. Brewer, Esq., of Tuskegee. The inside work of the so-called convention was kept profoundly secret by the participants, and it is not known how or in what manner the nomination was made, nor how many aspirants for the honor (?) may have been before the convention. Brewer is a Tuskegee lawyer. He will make the race, he says, if no one else can be prevailed upon to take the field against the Democratic nominee. He has no hopes of election, and laying claim to no ambition, he goes so far in his letter, which we publish elsewhere, as to beg that the burden of the nomination be placed upon the shoulders of another. But perhaps this may be what he deems the best method of expressing a very different meaning.

The Democratic nominee is bound to win the race and Mr. Brewer may well desire to remain "an humble citizen" until he is called upon by the people in a proper way.

Tammany for the Ticket.

Tammany Hall has come to the scratch, and on Friday last the sachems assembled and ratified the nominations of Cleveland and Hendricks. The ratification was a somewhat novel one, being an "acquiesence with a protest." The great sachems emphatically declare that Cleveland is unfit for the office of President, and "acquiesce with a protest," the protest to express that they are not in love with the head of the Democratic ticket, and further, is an expression of disapprobation of the manner in which they were "sat down upon" by the Democratic convention. They claim that Tammany has always been a Democratic organization, and will always support the Democratic nominee, though that nominee may not express Democratic principles and precepts exactly according to the teachings of Tammany Hall. They give way to the work of the party convention, but do so with a reluctance which is boldly declared:

The trouble with Tammany has been that Cleveland would not be controlled in the administration of the State affairs of New York by the dictates of the organization and its chieftan. This is a very great recommendation in itself before the people for Governor Cleveland. He has often had occasion while Governor of the State of New York to show his determined purpose to follow the right even at the hazard of losing the good will and support of such rings and political machines as Tammany is conceded to be. As to Tammany's protest, it is like its support. Cleveland can be elected without either.

Toleration.

Sometime since several parties claiming to be Mormon emissaries, were shot and killed by citizens in Tennessee. The cry of religious intolerance was raised, and with very little show of reason. If the Mormons or Latter Day Saints are opposed to the practice of polygamy and adultery, and to all other crimes contrary to the religious precepts set forth by the decalogue as handed down from Sinai, there is no reason why they should not be tolerated. There is very little religious intolerance in this country. Whether a man be a churchman or an atheist, as long as he keeps his hands free from crime, he has equal protection under the law—if he should have a good supply of cash his protection is more sure. His religion is not taken into consideration. It is very probable that in this Tennessee case the reputed Mormon emissaries were slain as a reparation for a stain they had brought upon the honor of the households of the men who slew them. In this summary punishment there may have been and likely was no religious intolerance. A so-called Mormon emissary visited this county some time since. In a short while after his advent he was serving a term at hard labor for the county for the crime of adultery. He was sent up not for his preachings but for his practices. Many think that he merited death for the basis of the head of the family he had dishonored; but this fate he escaped, and after serving his term he was released, perhaps to bring shame and disgrace to some other household.

Toleration of religion is a very good thing, but the same toleration cannot be extended to one among the greatest of crimes. The fact that the criminal seeks to shield himself under the guise of religion makes his all the more vile.

HE WON'T AND HE WILL.

What May Be Considered as Brewer's Letter of Acceptance.

The Advertiser of yesterday gave the particulars of a conference of "Independents and Republicans" held in this city, the result of which was the nomination of W. C. Brewer, of Macon, as a candidate for Congress from the Fifth District. The following is Brewer's letter of acceptance:

TUSKEGEE, ALA., Sept. 10, 1884

Messrs. Henery R. McCoy, Benj. W. Walker, and others, Montgomery, Ala:

GENTLEMEN—The matter concerning which your telegram was despatched, has employed my mind, not to-day only, but for many days. That from among the people there should arise some man, at whose hands the machine system, not of the people, but of would be political leaders, rebuke, sure and direct, would come, has appeared to me not only fit, but inevitable. That the fraud which has come to transform elections into farces, and which threatens to submerge entirely the fundamental principles of representative government, and which, under pretense of ridding the white man of the negro, yet thrusts the negro—if not in person, still in corrupt figures—to drown the white voices, few or many, must and shall close, it seems to me apparent.

That political intolerance, which obtrudes itself across the threshold of social life is a devlish cross betwixt cowardice and ignorance, and should be banished from the land.

Surely, gentlemen, the people—most of all, the white people—cannot be indifferent to these things, which, in the end must rebound with most terrible effect against themselves.

Who is the man to preach anew the everlasting doctrine of political freedom and purity? Certainly, gentlemen, where there must be so many good men imbued with these true ideas of the situation, it would not be difficult to choose.

My affairs are such that it would be exceptionably a sacrifice for me to become the recognized head of those who shall champion the rights of the people. Name, then, some man, good and true, with convictions, and courage to maintain them, and my heart and hand are with you. Do this, I beg of you, for I have no ambition higher than to be an humble citizen, striving with whatever of might or influence I may possess to bring about a purer and higher standard of political virtues. This much I shall add, rather than see the banner of pure political methods and representation of the people, go down, I will take it into my hands—weak though they be—and at personal sacrifice, through the vile mud and revilings of envenomed partisanship, the blind fury of political zealots, and the misgiving and misconstruction, it may be, of some good men, bear it at least some way, there to be taken up again in the near future by more vigorous and robust ability than I claim.

In that Democracy which is of the people, for the people, and by the people, I am Yours truly,

WALPOLE C. BREWER.

This letter of Mr. Brewer's is in answer to the call of a few Radicals and so-called Independents. It is according to the regulation Radical pattern, and like all other appeals for the support of that party charges the Democrats with fraud. He is leaning on a broken reed if he goes into this canvass with the expectation of making any inroad on Mr. Sadler's Democratic strength. The convention at Verbena was unusually well attended by delegates from every county. The contest for the nomination was lively, but conducted in the best of feeling and the convention adjourned in a high state of enthusiasm. Mr. Sadler is eminently worthy of the hearty support of the good people of the Fifth District, and he will receive it. Mr. Brewer will get the same vote that was given McCoy two years ago.—Advertiser.

There is a chimpanzee at the Central park in New York, a plump and portly fellow, who is the constant centre of an admiring group of visitors. His mouth is under his nose, not in front of it, as in most monkeys, his ears are human, and his hands are like those of a child. He has an intelligent look, and eyes a visitor curiously to see if he has ever met him before. When he goes to sleep he rolls himself up in a blanket like a soldier in camp.—Boston Transcript.

The animal is undoubtedly a Boston monkey.

STARVING TO DEATH.

John Wesley DuBose Imitates Tanner.

Birmingham Chronicle.

An account of the capture of John Wesley DuBose, a white convict at the Pratt Mines, was given in these columns several months ago. His life is a thrilling one. His crimes against God and man run all the scale of criminality from murder down to self-starvation. As often as he has been jailed, just so often has he escaped. When free he is a desperate and deep-dyed villain, when in prison he is noted for his piety and emulates his illustrious namesake in singing and shouting.

When the devil was sick, the devil a saint would be;
When the devil got well, the devil a saint was he.

This thread of religious zeal running through the warp and woof of his life, is the only light shade to its dark and bloody nature. The devotion of his wife, who followed him through evil as well as good report, lends a tinge of romance to the convict's career. When arrested in the woods of Chilton county some six months ago she threw herself between her husband and his pursuers. But for her the earthly career of DuBose would have been closed, and no need that he should make the attempt on his own life which he has just done at Pratt Mines. He was seen to weaken and pine away. Finally from a robust man, he became a mere skeleton. His task of coal was no longer cut. He took to his couch. The physician was sent for. He felt the pulse of DuBose, and making a diagnosis of his case concluded that the man was starving to death. He accused the conscience stricken man, and he confessed. "An angel came to me in a dream," said the convict, "and told me not to eat anything."

Here cropped out his old fanaticism again. DuBose evidently thought he would be sustained miraculously without food, or fed by the ravens as was Elijah. The physician applied a stomach pump, and forced sweet milk down his throat. It is not often that a stomach pump is used to force anything into a man, but in this instance it was very effective. The process was not at all pleasant, and John Wesley was soon brought to his senses. He is now sitting at the table in his right mind. Sweet milk is used to raise a child on, and in this instance raised a man from the dead.

Advice to an Alabama Candidate.

New York Sun.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: Please answer me the following questions in the Sun: I am an independent candidate for congress, and have challenged the democratic nominee to a joint discussion before the public. He has declined. The public temper is that of indifference, whereas heretofore it has been intensely partisan and bitter. Would it be good tactics in me to canvass alone and arraign him upon his record, or conduct a passive, quite canvass?

I am a good leader in vocal singing societies, such as are to be found only in the country at the south. How would it do for me to call on the people at convenient places in the district for singing, and merely state that as my opponent had declined a joint discussion, I would not attempt to worry them with a one-sided speech, but spend the time in singing beautiful songs?

Robert Bonner.

Mr. Bonner is one of the few really self-made made men of New York, and one of the substantial few. His history of 60 years is well known to most readers, but I think the following anecdotes illustrative of him have never been properly told. He had been advertising quite largely in his way in the Herald of this city, sometimes taking as much as two columns to announce a blood-curdling tale by Sylvanus Cobb, Jr., or some other of his sensational story writers. On one occasion he went to the Herald with a six-line advertisement which he wanted inserted once in each column of the advertising pages, the rest of the column and page to be blank. The clerk taking the advertisement referred it to Joseph Elliott, then the publisher of the Herald, to whom Mr. Bonner said: "Can't I have a page to myself?" "Certainly you can," was the reply. "Can't I have two?" Bonner asked. "Yes." "Can I have four?" "I guess so." "How about eight?" Elliott had to consult either Hudson or Bennett, and there was some mechanical difficulty. Bonner had to content himself with his six-line advertisement inserted twenty-four times at a cost for the single day's publication of about $2,000. But he always claimed to have "bluffed" the Herald. The apparent absurdity of repeating the same little announcement in twenty-four columns caused his minister to remonstrate with Bonner for his extravagance. "Why do you adopt such business methods?" he was asked. "Solely to make you and others notice them," was his sagacious reply. Such methods were the basis of the splendid fortune which enables him to own Baxter, Barns, Maud S., and to house them like princes in a palatial stable.

Good season for cotton picking.

The Clanton camp meeting will commence the first Sunday in October.

Rev. W. A. Wood, of Benson, has been very ill with fever, but is now recovering.

Mr. James Moates died at his residence eight miles east of Clanton on last Tuesday night. He was about seventy-five years of age.

Chicken thieves have been depredating in West Clanton to the annoyance of Messrs. John Aldridge and L. B. Wells.

An old lady, familiarly known as Grandmother Damascus, died seven miles east of Clanton one day last week at the advanced age of 108 years.

The VIEW office is now prepared with a new outfit to do job printing in the best style and at low rates. Give us your work and keep your money at home.

The first bale of the new crop of cotton was brought to Clanton on Friday, by Mr. J. W. Culp. It brought 10 cents and was purchased by Mr. R. Ehrman.

Mr. J. M. Stanfield, late of Wadsworth, Ala., will shortly remove to Clanton and will merchandise here. Mr. Stanfield will make a citizen whom we will gladly welcome.

An accommodation lot is being fenced in by Messrs. Wilson and Ehrman for the accommodation of their customers. This is a good move and will attract trade to this point.

Mrs. Anderson Baker, Sr., died on the 10th inst., after a protracted illness. She was the wife of county commissioner Baker. The family has the sympathies of our entire community.

Trade in Clanton still dull, but cotton is opening, and the merchants may get something to do, if they invite it; which they seem to be very timid in doing because printer's ink costs a little.

The fall trade is opening up and the wide-awake merchant will obtain the patronage of the people by advertising his goods. This is business. Let the people know what you have to sell and how you sell it.

Parties visiting Clanton from a distance during the camp meeting will have no trouble in securing transportation to the camp ground as Mr. J. H. Aldridge will run a hack day and night during the week.

Died, near Clanton, on the 10th inst., of bilious fever, Mr. Houston Vines, aged about twenty years. The deceased was a son of Mr. James Vines, and was a young man of much promise. We tender our sympathies to the bereaved relatives.

Mr. Anderson Baker is building a church for the Protestant Methodists at Walnut Creek. Mr. E. H. Parish is assisting in the work. Mr. Baker is the sole contributor to this good work, with one or two exceptions of parties who have contributed small amounts.

Miss Mamie Bivings has returned to Pewee Valley, Ky., where she will, during the next year, complete her graduating course.

The Quitman (Ga.,) Free Press hits the nail on the head as follows: "An editor is a man who is liable to grammatical errors, toothache, typographical errors, and lapses of memory, and usually he has 97,000 people watching him tripping. He is a man of sorrow, acquainted with grief and poverty, and frequently liable to go ragged, hungry, and dry for a long period. And the woods are full of people who want to be editors."

Mrs. E. C. Lawrence left Clanton Thursday to take a position as assistant in Calera Academy. Prof. J. M. Langston, the accomplished principal of this institution has now one of the finest schools in this section of the State. Besides himself he finds it necessary to engage the services of three assistants. Such an institution speaks volumes of any community and Calera is to be congratulated that it is located within her limits.

We have received the initial number of The Bulletin, New Orleans, devoted to industrial matters. It is elegantly printed on excellent paper and will labor to promote the success of the Great World's Fair at that place next Winter. Only fifty cents a year. Published by W. H. H. Judson, chief of Department of Printing and Publishing Expesition. We will gladly place it on our exchange list, and hope it may have a prosperous career.

Meeting of Executive Committee.

A meeting of the county Democratic Executive Committee is hereby called to be held in the courthouse at Clanton, on Monday, Sept. 29th at 12:30 p. m. A full attendance of members is desired as important business will come before the committee.

S. T. BRITTLE, Chairman.
W. H. LAWRENCE, Sec'y.

A Fine Animal.

The beautiful Percheron-Norman Stallion, "Conqueror," now at Clanton for the season, is a magnificent specimen of imported French stock. His weight is 1435 pounds; he is 16 hands high and is six years old. He is the property of Mr. John S. Storrs, of Shelby Iron Works. Mr. Storrs paid $1,700 for him. The Percheron-Norman horses, according to the best authorities on horse flesh, are exceptionably fine in every respect—have lots of bone and muscle, good action and style, and are the pick of numerous importations brought to this country as first-class sires. "Conqueror" is standing the present season at Clanton.

In a Sad Plight.

Our cemetery is a sad commentary upon our community. Hogs and cows are running at large within the grounds every day, and the dead pines which lie scattered about the inclosure give it the appearance of a deserted spot. Those citizens who are interested, and all should be, should make an effort to raise funds for putting up gates and cleaning out the rubbish. With proper care and attention the Clanton cemetery would be a beautiful spot. Every body would be willing to contribute something toward making attractive the last long home of the dead. Those who have relatives buried there are the ones to move in the matter. By the kindness and sympathetic spirit of Mrs. A. M. Knox and her pupils a nice little sum was realized by a public entertainment last Summer. This amount, we understand, is in the hands of the Probate Judge, where it was placed for safe keeping by Mrs. Knox. It should be added to by contributions and utilized.

Tribute to Women.

There have been written many beautiful tributes to women, but the following is the finest we have ever seen: "Place her among the flowers, foster her as a tender plant, and she is a thing of fancy, waywardness and folly—annoyed by a dew drop, fretted by the touch of a butterfly's wings, ready to faint at the sound of a beetle or the rattle of a window pain at night and is overpowered by the perfume of a rosebud. But let real calamity come, rouse her affections, enkindle the fires of her heart and mark her then! How strong is her heart! Place her in the heat of battle—give her a child, a bird or anything to protect—and see her lifting her white arms as shield, as her own bloom crimsons her upturned forehead, praying for her life to protect the helpless. Transplant her in the dark places of the earth, call forth the energies of action, and her breath becomes a healing balm, her presence a blessing. She disputes inch by inch the stalking pestilence, when man, the strong, brave, pale and affrighted shrieks away. Misfortune haunts her not. She wears a life of silent endurance, and goes forth with less timidity than to her bridal. In prosperity she is a bud full of odors, waiting but for the tide of adversity to scatter them abroad—pure gold, valuable, but untried in the furnace. In short, woman is a miracle, a mystery, the center from which radiates the charm of existence."

Mountain Creek Locals.

Weather cool and pleasant, but fearfully dry. Gardens have entirely failed.

Capt. Cole has returned from an extended business trip North. We gladly welcome this truly whole-souled genial gentleman back in our midst.

Young Parish who was shot by his cousin, Mr. Smith, a few days ago is rapidly improving.

A moonlight picnic was greatly enjoyed by the young folks a few nights ago.

Messrs. Bolling Blakey and Willie Durr left for the State University at Tuskaloosa Tuesday.

We want to know if the "Man's Rights" published in your last issue is "a get up" of your own? If so we extend the hand of fellowship, but beg to differ in one respect. Women have rights but do not execute them. Men, vice versa.

Mr. T. L. Jones lost a fine Jersey cow some weeks ago, for which he paid $450. AILEEN.

Meeting of the Executive Committee of the 5th Congressional District.

The presence of every member is earnestly desired.

YOU OR I.

If we could know
Which of us, darling, would be first to go,
Who would be first to breast the swelling tide,
And step alone upon the other side—
If we could know!

If it were you,
Should I walk softly, keeping death in view?
Should I my love to you more oft express?
Or should I grieve you, darling, any less—
If it were you?

If it were I,
Should I improve the moments slipping by?
Should I more closely follow God's great plan,
Be filled with greater charity to man—
If it were I?

If we could know!
We cannot, darling; and 'tis better so.
I should forget, just as I do to-day,
And walked along the same old stumbling way—
If I could know.

I would not know
Which of us, darling, will be first to go.
I only wish the space may not be long
Between the parting and the greeting song;
But when, or where, or how we're called to go—
I would not know.

A WIDOW BY PROXY.

Should you wish to know to what height artistic gardening can be brought let me advise you to pay a visit to Haarlem (in Holland), where near the beautiful park filled with deer, which makes such a beautiful walk, you will find the famous horticulturist, Claereboets. After he has shown you his astonishing collection of tulips, hyacinths, carnations, anemones, crowsfeet, camelias, primroses, cowslips, cactus and pelargonims, you will be delighted. Try and persuade him to allow you to see his six remaining daughters and you will be dazzled.

It is the story of the seventh, or rather the first, which I am about to tell you. Just as this worthy man, who has remained poor, although his conservatories are full of treasures, told it me last year.

At the end of the year 1882 he had seven daughters on his hands. However, the Misses Claereboets were as virtuous as they were lovely, as sensible as they were poor, alas! and their appetites were only equaled by their virtue.

One winter evening, at the end of one of those meals which absorbed all the profits of the business, Claereboets lighted his pipe, and with a mysterious air drew from his pocket a letter with a foreign postmark.

"Guess who has written to me?" he said.

Seven pairs of well-developed shoulders shrugged simultaneously, expressive of ignorance.

"Why, Micheels Maassen, the son of our former neighbor, the contractor. He is the cashier of Planter Van Meeruyi, in Java. He wishes to settle down, and seeks one of your hands in marriage."

"Which one, papa?" exclaimed five somewhat tremulous voices.

"It's the same to him. He was eleven years old when he left. He is now twenty-eight, so you may understand that he has no choice. It is for you to decide, and I am going to take your opinion, beginning at the eldest. Well, Mina, will you marry Micheels?"

"Yes, papa," replied the eldest Miss Claereboets, without hesitation. She was a magnificent blonde, twenty-four years old.

Around the silent room six discreetly subdued sighs were heard.

"Right, my child," said the father, as quietly as if it had been the matter of delivering a hundred hyacinthes. "Micheels is a good fellow, with excellent references. He sends his deed, all in order, to the lawyer for the marriage. We will avail ourselves of its being fall to consumate the affair, so that you shall not arrive there in the hot weather."

Three weeks later Mina had become Mrs. Maassen. When I say had, it requires some explanation.

The Dutch, the best colonists in the world and the most practical people I know of, have devised an easy means by which their single friends settled in the Antipodes can easily be married in the metropolis.

To make the bridegroom pass two months at sea, thereby to attend the registry for ten minutes and the church for perhaps double that time was a barbarity. To send out the intended was dangerous. She might find the suitor eaten up by a tiger.

To get over this the Dutchman instituted marriage by proxy. For instance, you may be at Sumatra and you wish a fine looking helpmate. You have nothing to do but to send to a friend at Rotterdam or Utrecht a power of attorney to act on your behalf. He marries her without charging any commission whatsoever; she carries her title deeds away with her. He registers her in the first steamer and four or five months after the order is given the commission is executed and delivered.

Thus the beautiful Mina, who had seen many of her friends married in the same way, did not consider the process anything unusual.

She cried a little, however, as she embarked on a superb steamer belonging to the "Koninkylke Nederlandsche steomboot Maatschappy" and saw her native land disappearing.

Presently the Batavia got out to sea and then she was too much otherwise engaged to be able to find time to cry, and she never came out of her stateroom till they reached Suez. Then awful storms arose, the shaft broke and they reached Colombo by sailing, arriving just in time to catch the boat for Singapore. Mina was so ill as to be unconscious. She was carried from one ship to another again they were at sea, the only difference she realized being that the berth close to her was of ebina instead of copper.

She arrived at Singapore in a prostrate condition, imagining her last hour had come. Again she was transferred on a shaky pinnace to another steamer, and for three days she suffered as she never had before. Every time she heard some one say "Samarang" she revived a little, for she knew that was the end of her journey. Here she found herself in the abode of the Dutch Consul, lying on a couch which seemed to be tossing up and down, although on dry land, till she thought she would be thrown out on the floor.

She was just lamenting the inattention of every one to her, when a young man with fair mustache and straightforward-looking blue eyes entered the office of the Consul, who was busily writing to catch the mail.

"I am expecting a young woman from Europe, whom I have married by proxy," said the visitor, "and I have come to make inquiries."

"She has just been brought here," said the official, without stopping his writing. "She is in a very bad state, and you would do me a favor by taking her off my couch as soon as possible. Leave your address and the baggage will be forwarded."

The meeting of the pair may be imagined. He timid, she a weakened, prostrate ghost of her former self.

The young colonist was, however, pleased with his acquisition, and hailing two coolies, had his wife taken to the Samarang depot. The train took them half way to Djokjokarta, where two almost nude men lifted the well-nigh insensible Mina out.

An hour later she was seated next to her legal husband on the rough cushions of a two-wheeled cart, drawn by two jogging oxen, which shook her terribly. However, Mina felt better. She looked up at her husband, and was pleased with his appearance. Gun in hand, he seemed to watch furtively every nook and cranny as they passed, but paid her no attention. This seemed strange to her.

"You are very fond of sport, it seems?" she said, in a semi-reproachful tone. These were the first words she had uttered to her companion.

"I never was so frightened at meeting game as I am at this moment. This is a lovely climate, and I hope you will like the country; but it has one disadvantage. After six o'clock in the evening it is infested with tigers, who prowl about in search of what they may devour, so that it is best to remain at home after that hour. However, we have passed the most dangerous part, and we are getting near home."

Poor Mina! She no longer wished to talk. She trembled from head to foot. At last they arrived at a fine bungalow, raised off the ground, to avoid the snakes and adders, with verandahs all around. On the steps stood a pale, thin old lady, who came forward, attracted by the noise of wheels. She was Mina's mother-in-law.

"What, my child, you here already?" cried the old lady, much surprised. "We did not expect you until next week."

"We had an accident on the way, madame."

"That would delay rather than accelerate your arrival. However, here you are; that is the main thing. Be welcome, my child. You must be hungry."

"Oh, madame, I only want sleep! If you only knew what a journey I have had!"

"Don't make any excuses, my child. I will get your room ready at once, and take you there myself."

An hour later Mina slept beneath the waving Punkah, wrapt in sweet sleep and pleasant dreams.

"Do you know you will have a pretty wife?" said the mother on rejoining her son under the verandah.

"It is astonishing how little she resembles the photograph your uncle once sent of her."

"Yes," said the young man, "she is very lovely. I would like to go early to the church, mother; because, after all, we have not been regularly married."

On the morrow, Mina came down all pink and white. Did you sleep well, dear Anna? said her husband for the first time kissing his wife's forehead.

"But," said the young woman, smiling, my name is not Anna; my name is Mina—Mina Claereboets. Had you already forgotten it?"

"What!" cried the colonist, pale as death, "are you not Anna—Anna Tanssens?"

"Great God! and you"—

"I am called Hans Van Hasselt. Don't you come from Edam? Isn't your father a cheese merchant?"

"He is a gardener near Haarlem. I have married Micheels Maassen, cashier of the house of Van Meeruyi. Here is my certificate of marriage."

Hans seized the papers, with trembling hand, and glanced over them hurriedly.

"Mother," said he to old Mrs. Van Hasselt, who at that moment entered, arrayed in her finest robes, "a misfortune has occurred. I made a mistake at Samarang. The young lady belongs to another."

The matron was a sensible woman. In a moment she understood all. It was certainly hard on her son, already three parts in love with a woman who was not for him, and whose husband would have to be found in an island fifteen hundred miles away, and he would have to be found before the real Mrs. Hans appeared on the scene, else she would have two daughters-in-law on her hands.

Without losing a day, they started off with Mina, who thought rest would never come to her. The only plan was to go to the Consuls of the various islands till they heard news of the happy Maassen, to whom he would have to give up Mina, to be replaced by the homely original of his photograph.

To less resigned natures the position would have been insufferable, but these two contented themselves in the happiness of seeing each other daily. Hans was more in love every day with Mina, and she, alas! often shed a tear when she looked up at the false Micheels.

Ten days had already elapsed in visiting the ports most frequented by Europeans—Batavia, Cheribon, Tegal, Pekalongan. The transition became a duo, for Mina still suffered at sea

"LITTLE BROWN HANDS."

They drive home the cows from the pasture,
Up through the long shady lane,
Where the quail whistles loud in the wheat field
All yellow with ripening grain.

They find, in the thick waving grasses,
Where the scarlet-tipped strawberry grows,
They gather the earliest snow-drops,
And the first crimson buds of the rose.

They toss the hay in the meadow,
They gather the elder blooms white,
They find where the dusky grapes purple
In the soft-tinted October light.

They know where the apples hang ripest,
And are sweeter than Italy's wines,
They know where the fruit in the thickest
On the long, thorny blackberry vines.

They gather the delicate sea weeds,
And build tiny castles of sand;
They pick up the beautiful sea shells—
Fairy barks that have drifted to land,

They wave from the tall, rocking tree-tops,
Where the oriole's hammock nest swings,
And at night-time are folded in slumber
By a song that a fond mother sings.

Those who toil bravely are strongest;
The humble and poor become great;
And from those brown-handed children
Shall grow mighty rulers of state.

The pen of the author and statesman,
The noble and wise of our land—
The sword and chisel and palette,
Shall be held in the little brown hand.

MY LOVE.

She doth little kindnesses,
Which most leave undone or despise,
For naught that sets one heart at ease
And giveth happiness or peace
Is low-esteemed in her eyes.

Blessing she is: God made her so;
And deeds of week-day holiness
Fall from her noiseless as the snow.
Nor hath she ever chanced to know
That aught were easier than to bless.

A MAN OF THE ROAD.

Many years ago, or, as children's stories say, "once upon a time," when Bath was in all its glory, and Beau Nash reigned as its king, two ladies were journeying toward that fashionable town in a postchaise. Why two middle-aged ladies should in those unsafe times have undertaken a journey without any male escort, I cannot say. The result proved that they were very ill-advised in doing so. It was broad daylight, and not very far from Bath, when the postboy suddenly pulled up the horses, and the chaise-door was thrown open from without with the usual stern command:

"Your money or your life!"

I need hardly say anything as to the state of terror into which the ladies immediately fell; no doubt they screamed, in spite of the uselessness of such a proceeding, but it is not upon record that they fainted. On the contrary, the one nearest to the door submissively handed her watch, purse, trinkets, etc., to the masked highwayman; and the other, a Mrs. C., was hastily preparing to get rid of her valuables in the same way when the robber turned to remount his horse, as though he had overlooked the second occupant of the carriage.

Such an unbusiness-like proceeding certainly did not bespeak him an accomplished "gentleman of the road;" for in those days the search for valuables was usually conducted in a thorough and energetic manner, often accompanied with more or less violence, especially if the searcher had reason to suspect that the notes were "sham Abrams," or the watches from the manufactory of Mr. Pinchbeck.

By the way, do any of the present generation know the term of "Pinchbeck" for sham-gold? and if any of them do, are they aware how the term arose? To meet violence with craft, the travelers of those days provided themselves very frequently with false bank-notes and imitation gold watches, to be given up as booty, while the genuine articles were carefully hidden, and a Mr. Pinchbeck started a manufactory of these watches. But the "gentlemen of the road" soon got up to this trick, and to prevent such mistakes, they insisted on their victims taking solemn oaths as to the notes being those genuinely signed by "Abraham Newland," the cashier of the Bank of England; and also that the watches had not been supplied by Mr. Pinchbeck.

What passed through Mrs. C.'s mind as the highwayman turned away with only half his spoil it is impossible to say. Perhaps it occurred to her that he might find out his mistake, come back and take vengeance on them for their involuntary deception. Or perhaps she never thought at all, but acted on a terror-struck impulse. I do not suppose that she herself ever knew why she acted as she did, but she actually called to the highwayman to come back!

"Stop, stop!" she cried; "you have not got my watch and purse!"

The "gentleman of the road" came back again to the chaise door and held out his hand for the watch and purse which Mrs. C. seemed so anxious to get rid of. But that watch and purse had unknowingly been the last clasp something very like a trap; at any rate the turning back was a fatal move, for as the robber turned quickly to retrace Mrs. C. of her valuables the quick movement of his head as a passing gust of wind blew aside his drapo mask for a moment and Mrs. C. saw his face distinctly.

When the ladies arrived at Bath they were confident with the utmost details as to their fright and their loss, and no doubt Mrs. C. had to stand a good deal of joking about her kindly calling the highwayman back to take her own watch and purse. But such occurrences were too common for the condolences to be deep or long continued, or to cause interference on the part of any one whose duty it might have been to attend to the peace and safety of the public; and the "nine days' wonder"—if it continued so long—certainly did not last any longer.

I am inclined to think, however, that Mrs. C. kept her own counsel as to one result of that calling back, and told no one of her having seen the robber's face unmasked.

Some weeks had passed away, when one evening Mrs. C. was at the Assembly Rooms, together with all "the rank and fashion" of Bath. She was talking to a friend—a gentleman named Mr. M.—and at the same time surveying the ladies and gentlemen who frequent the Assembly, when she suddenly exclaimed:

"There's the man who robbed me!"

"Where?" asked Mr. M., in great astonishment.

Mrs. C. pointed to a fashionably-dressed young man who was talking to some of the company.

"My dear Mrs. C.," said Mr. M., "pray be more careful. You really must not bring such an accusation against that gentleman. Why, he is young H., son of Mr. H., of ——, a very wealthy and well-known man, and young H. is in all the best company. I know him well as a friend."

This was said in a joking manner, as Mr. M. thought that Mrs. C. was making an absurd mistake—deceived, perhaps, by some slight or even fancied resemblance.

But Mrs. C. said, seriously:

"I do not care who he is or what his father is, or even as to his being a friend of yours. That is the man who robbed me! I am quite certain about him, for when he turned back to take my purse and watch his crape mask blew aside and I saw his face. I remember it perfectly."

Mr. M. again tried to persuade her that she was mistaken; but to no purpose. Still trying to make a joke of her supposed extraordinary delusion, he said to Mrs. C.:

"I will bring him here, and introduce him to you, and then see if you will still assert he is a highwayman!"

Before she could decline the introduction, Mr. M. crossed the room to where the young man was standing, and said with a smile: "Here's a joke, H. That lady over there declares you are a highwayman, and that you are the man who robbed her a few weeks since! Come and be introduced to her."

But young H. did not take the joke as his friend meant it; on the contrary, he answered in rather an ill-tempered manner: "I do not want to be introduced to the old fool!"

"Well," said Mr. M., "you need not have taken it in that way, and lost your temper about such a trifle. Of course I was only in fun. I thought you would have enjoyed the joke, and tried to persuade her that you were an honest man, and not a gentleman of the road. Pray, do not be offended." So saying, Mr. M. returned to Mrs. C., and reported that the young gentleman had taken the joke in ill part, and refused to be introduced to her.

Once more Mrs. C. declared it was neither a joke nor a mistake, but that in serious fact young H. was the highwayman whom she had called back to take her watch and purse. The subject was then allowed to drop; and after a little conversation on other matters, Mr. M. took his leave of Mrs. C., with the intention of smoothing the matter over with his friend H., as he did not want their friendship to be interrupted, and he had clearly seen that Mr. H. was much annoyed. With this friendly intention he looked about in the Assembly Rooms for young Mr. H., but without success. He then inquired of some mutual friends, and was told that young Mr. H. had left the room almost directly after he, Mr. M., had last spoken to him, and had seemed much annoyed and disturbed.

This meant much Mr. M. all the more anxious to find his friend and put the matter right with him. Leaving the rooms, Mr. M. looked in at their club, and at two or three other places where he thought it likely he might find Mr. H. But his search was unsuccessful, and he had to go home without seeing his friend, comforting himself with the thought that he would next day call on Mr. H. at his father's house, where he lived.

But the next day young H. was not at his father's; nor, indeed, did he ever again appear at Bath. When he left the Assembly Rooms, he returned home, changed his dress, left at once left Bath, and, it is supposed, left England also at the earliest opportunity.

Of the grief and agony of his father and of his family, I will not speak; it can easily be imagined what distress and shame they suffered.

Mr. H., the father, was a wealthy man, of good position and family; but the young man, an only son, brought up to no profession, but only to inherit his father's riches, had fallen, probably from sheer want of employment, into bad company, had played for very high stakes—lost—played again—staked his father's position in trying to retrieve, and at last had taken to the road to replenish his purse—a not very uncommon proceeding in those days—while at the same time keeping his place in society.

From his rubbishy-like haste and want of looking after the whole of the body, in the case of Mrs. C. and her friend, it is to be presumed that he had only lately adopted the practice of—as it was politely called—"collecting his rents on the road," even if it was not his first attempt. How long, however, he might have continued the "collection," but for the accident of the mask being blown aside, is another question.

If this were fiction, I might enlarge on young H's future career in another land. I might, on the one hand, make him go from bad to worse, and end his career by murder and a murderer's death. Or, on the other hand, I might depict him as leading a new life in a new country, and eventually returning to England, to the joy and comfort of his family, and worthily inheriting his father's wealth and position. I might even describe his penitent introduction to Mrs. C., and his deep gratitude to her for checking him in his downward career; and still further might end the romance by his falling in love with and marrying Mrs. C.'s daughter. But romance is denied me, for the story is not fiction, but fact in all its details. Mrs. C. was an ancestress of the writer, and the story has been handed down in the family.

Being, therefore, obliged to keep to facts, I am compelled to admit that I know nothing as to young H's after-life; so I must close my true history by supposing that he was never again heard of in his native country for good or evil, after his detection by Mrs. C. as "a gentleman of the road."—Chambers' Journal.

The Cholera Patient.

How He Feels After an Attack of the Dreaded Disease.

The patient feels well up to within a few hours of the attack, or, it may be, goes to bed and sleeps soundly through the night, and immediately on rising in the morning is seized with violent purging and vomiting. If judiciously treated, many patients recover from this, the first stage of cholera; but if neglected, the tendency of the disease is to grow rapidly worse. The patient complains of intense thirst and a burning heat at the pit of his stomach; he suffers also excruciating pain from cramps in the muscles of the extremities; he is terribly restless; and his urgent cry is for water to quench his thirst and that some one might rub his limbs, and thus relieve the muscular spasm. The pulse is rapid and very weak, the respirations are hurried and the patient's voice becomes husky. His countenance is pinched, and the integument of his body feels inelastic and doughy, while the skin of his hands and feet become wrinkled and purplish in color. The duration of this, the second stage of cholera, is very uncertain—it may last for two or three hours only, or may continue for twelve or fifteen hours; but so long as the pulse can be felt at the wrist there are still good hopes of the sick person's recovery. The weaker the pulse becomes, the nearer the patient is to the third, or collapse, stage of cholera, from which probably not more than thirty-five per cent. recover. In the third stage of the disease the vomiting and purging continue, although in mitigated form; and the skin is covered with a clammy perspiration, especially if the cramps are still severe. The patient remains terribly restless, longing only for sleep, and that he may be supplied with water. His intellect is clear; but he seldom expresses any anxiety regarding worldly affairs, although fully conscious of the dangerous condition he is in. Sleep and a plentiful supply of drinking-water are the sole desires of a person passing through the collapse stage of cholera. This condition seldom lasts more than twenty-four hours, and reaction either commences within that period or the patient dies in collapse or passes on into the typhoid stage, which in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred ends speedily in death. On the other hand, the sick person having been in the collapse stage of cholera some twenty-four hours (it may be a longer or shorter period), the temperature of his body may begin to rise, gradually creeping up to the normal standard; the functions of animal life are slowly restored, and the sick person recovers his health.

Long Lived.

The longest-lived fruit tree known is the orange. It is reported to have attained the age of three hundred years, and it is known to have flourished and borne fruit for more than a hundred years. No fruit tree will flourish and produce a fruit so well under rough treatment. It commences to bear the third or fourth year after budding, and by the fifth year it will produce an abundant crop, but its yield will increase gradually under favorable circumstances; as the years pass it will become a very productive tree. The early growth of the orange is quite rapid, and by its tenth year it will have increased more than in the next fifty years, so far as breadth and height are concerned, but in age positions its fruits when greatly, and in this case will sometimes last to several thousand oranges.

TALKS WITH THE BOYS.

A FEW VERY INTERESTING FACTS AND FIGURES

That will Show a Boy Something Tangible About the Varie ies Trades and what Can be Made in Them.

[From the Detroit Free Press.]

"I am a strong, healthy boy, 16 years old, and have a fair common school education. I must make my own way in life. What trade would you advise me to learn?"

Advice would do you no good. We will give you some facts and figures regarding a good many trades and you can see what they offer. In presenting these figures we are guided by what is paid in Detroit. They may be somewhat higher in Chicago or New York and somewhat lower in other cities, but, taking the country over, the average will be about the same.

If you want to become a butcher you must serve a three years' apprenticeship. The rule is to board with your employer, and the first year, if handy and willing, get $25 or $30 above board. During the first year you will drive cart and do the rough work. After the third year you will get all the way from $7 to $14 per week. There is one butcher in Detroit receiving $20 per week, but there are plenty working for less than $14. In most cases the apprentice sets up for himself after his term has expired, and few butchers travel on the trade.

The apprentice to a harness maker must serve the same time. The best boy will not get over $5 per month the first year, and the majority only $3. It is all shop work, and used to be considered a good trade, but of late years so many State Prisons have gone into the business, and machinery has had so much to do with it, the harness-makers are discouraged. In the average shops journeymen can be hired for $9 or $10 per week. It is doubtful if the very best men, working on fancy harness, can make over $15 per week.

If you would be a shoemaker you must also serve three years. You would get what is called "board and clothes" the first year, which means board and about $25 in cash. The second year you would get board and $50, and third year board and $100. During this apprenticeship, if you were the right kind of a boy, you would be allowed to earn considerable change for yourself by odd jobs of cobbling. The wages of good journeymen shoemakers are from $12 to $15 per week, and a good man is never out of work. There is no lost time, and weather which is bad for other trades is good for the shoemaker.

The tinner's apprentice serves the same period. The wages given are $50, $75 and $100 per year with board, but if your employer is the right kind of a man, he will allow you to earn a dime occasionally by mending a leak. Many tinners are also plumbers, but in cities the two trades are kept separate. Any one of them can, however, work more or less with other tools. Roofing and sheet-iron work should go with the trade. The wages of a good journeyman are $2 per day, but more are receiving $10 per week than above. Labor-saving machinery has sadly interfered with the journeyman during the last six years. The pans, pie-tins, cups and several other articles he used to cut by pattern and solder together, are now stamped at a blow without seams.

The baker business takes no regular apprentice. Boys are taken to work, and are allowed to learn how to bake, but there is no agreement as to time. The greater portion of the work can be learned in a year, but bakers who have followed the trade for twenty years can still learn something new. The wages are from $7 to $12 per week. It is a fancy baker who gets the latter figure.

The apprenticeship to a plumber is for three years. A boy will get about $3 per week, without board, the first year, and $5 to $6 the second. A plumber who is also a steam-fitter can count on from $2 to $2.50 per day and steady work. The wages paid to either a plumber or gas-fitter will average $3 per day.

The apprenticeship to a painter is for the same term, but, owing to labor-saving machinery, paper labor and other causes, it is perhaps the poorest trade a boy can learn. Good cabinet-makers are working for less than $2 per day, and the very best hands won't average over $13 per week. An apprentice would be paid about $2 per week the first year, but without board.

In cities of any size a painter means a craftsman who paints buildings. He does not pretend to meddle with anything further, or at least should not. An apprentice would serve about one year at, say, $3 per week. After that he could draw pretty fair wages, but the average pay is not over $2 per day, and there is a great deal of lost time.

Paper-hanging and decorating have come to be an art. Men with taste and skill can earn from $2.25 to $3.50 per day. An apprentice would have to serve at least two years, and would not be paid over $3 per week the first year.

What is called a locksmith in Detroit includes a dozen other businesses. He keeps a machine shop and a variety store. He runs a bicycle and gun repair shop, and is a dealer in all sorts of pattern wanted. He can mend a clock, put in an electric bell, repair anything in wood or iron, sharpen razors, file saws, cut screws and bolts and nuts, run engines, and, in fact, never turns a job of any sort away. He knows the science of steam, calculates friction to a nicety, and can tell you the variations of a rifle ball to a hair. He is indeed a mechanical genius, but when I asked him the other day how much wages he could pay a journeyman as handy as himself he replied: "Not over $2.50 per day at the best." An apprentice would receive about $3 per week, without board, the first year.

A wagonmaker's apprentice serves three years and would get only his board for the first year. The wages of the best workmen are not above $1.75 per day, and most of them get only $1.50. So many vehicles are turned out by state prisons and great wagon works like the Studebakers' that the trade is a poor one for any boy to pick up.

A city blacksmith has nothing to do with horse shoeing. He irons new vehicles and repairs old ones. An apprentice would get from $2 to $3 per week the first year and probably $1 a day for the third. The wages of a journeyman will average $12 per week.

Horse shoers take an apprentice for three years, but a boy would get nothing beyond his board for the first. When he is a finished workman he is certain of his $3 per day, and some get more than that. It is a trade which would not flourish very well in small towns, as the village blacksmith connects it with his own.

Carpenters bind their apprentices for three years, and pay from $2 to $3 per week, without board, the first year. A stout boy can be made useful from the outset. The wages of a common carpenter run from $1.50 to $2 per day. A carpenter and joiner—being a workman who can make doors, do fine "inside work," etc.—gets from $2 to $2.50 per day. There is considerable lost time in the trade and it is a lucky man who averages his $2 per day the year through.

A City Dude.

A somewhat familiar personage in New York is the young man of good family who lives without any visible means of support and goes in the best society. He is probably the most mysterious man in New York, and few if any of his friends understand how he manages to get along. After a little study this apparent secret begins to come out and assume distinct form. It will be seen that the expenses of a young unmarried man with good common sense are but nominal, and that a very small sum will suffice to keep his head above water. With economical but not parsimonious habits $1,000 or $1,500 a year will keep one of these society swells afloat, where he would need at least $10,000 a year if he were married. Say he is a clerk in a broker's office in Wall street, where he manages to eke out $15 or $20 a week. That is supposed to be an occupation not incompatible with the habits of a gentleman. He boards perhaps with some married friend and pays therefor $10 a week; or he may have a room in some mysterious place for which his income suffers to the extent of $4 or $5 a week. He may belong to a club, where his dues are but nominal, and the reduced price at which he gets his dinners and wines there will save him enough to pay his club expenses. Then he is well known among the club men, and by assiduously cultivating their acquaintance he manages to be asked out to dinner four or five times a week. But the tailor. Ah, there's the rub! To this interesting individual he is introduced by some wealthy friend and orders a dress suit, for which he pays or promises to pay $40 or $60. That obtained, together with an opera hat, a cane and a pair of patent leather shoes, he walks into society like Aladdin into the cave of the genii. Such little necessaries that follow, as flowers for his lady friends, cigars, car fare, a carriage now and then and an occasional box at the opera, he can make up by a cool head at a game of cards or perhaps writing the club gossip or society news for some weekly paper, and thus, well dressed, with easy hours and plenty of invitations out, he manages to make both ends meet without compromising his standing as "a gentleman."

A Court Dress.—The court dress worn by Mrs. John W. Foster, the wife of our Minister to Madrid, had a petticoat of heavy lemon gros grain, hand-embroidered with large gold and silver lilies; around the bottom of the skirt was a double ruche of lemon tulle, and over this a fringe of small pearls. The court train, four yards in length, was of heavy lemon satin brocaded with crimson velvet and gold lilies, and lined with satin and plush of the same dark crimson. The low corsage was of the same material as the train, trimmed richly with lace. In the hair three crimson tips were fastened by diamond buckles.

How to Cook It.—Cabbage cooked in this way makes a quail or even Sheave the cabbage very thin, then let it cook until tender in a very little water; drain it thoroughly. Put a lump of butter into a stew-pan, and let it melt and brown; then put the cabbage into it and let it fry a few minutes, stirring it well; then put in pepper and salt to taste, and serve hot.

LABORERS FROM ABROAD.

Taking Advantage of the Failure of the Bill to Prohibit Such Acts Which Passed the House Only.

The Washington Star says: "The bill to prevent the importation of foreign labor into this country under contract, which passed the House during the past session, failed to secure consideration in the Senate. There exists, consequently, nothing to prevent the continuance of such importation, and a firm in this city has prepared to embark in the business, with a view of supplanting American labor with workmen from Europe. The scheme is to import Welsh and Italian labors to work under contract at low wages. W. H. Main, a real estate agent, is at the head of the concern, and his agents are in Europe arranging for the shipment of laborers to this country.

"The plan is to keep a number of laborers and domestics of all kinds to meet all demands, and to replenish the stock by fresh shipments as they are needed. The managers will issue circulars to contractors all over the country, offering to give them a superior class of labor at low rates of wages. They will not, Mr. Main says, confine themselves to common laborers, but will get skilled workmen who will be willing to work for low wages to get a foothold in this country. Mr. Main's chief associate in this enterprise is said to be a German named Krott, formerly an itinerant preacher. He has now gone to Europe, where he will preach to the laborers of the advantages to be derived from coming to this country. To skilled labor they will offer special inducements, promising them permanent employment at wages much better than they can get in their native land. He says also that hundreds of farmers here want to sell their farms for want of help. Mr. Main says he can afford to pay skilled European laborers much higher wages than they get at home and still put them to work here for less than regular American wages. In connection with this they propose to run a colonization concern to bring over foreigners, chiefly Germans, who have small capital, to take up Western timber lands. Mr. Main says they have as much as a hundred thousand acres in a single region which will be applicable for this purpose."

Hunter Floyd and a Bear.

AN ACCOUNT OF THE MANNER IN WHICH THEY ENTERTAINED EACH OTHER.

A letter from Hawley, Pa., says: Frank Floyd, of Tolyhanna, went with his dog into the woods a few miles from that place to get a shot at a large bear some lumbermen had seen the day before. The dog found the track and started the bear out of a swamp. It made its way up a steep ridge and climbed a chestnut tree. Floyd fired and the bear came tumbling to the ground. The dog closed with the wounded animal and was almost instantly killed. Floyd poured the contents of his other barrel into the bear, which, now that it was brought to bay, became the aggressor and made a rush for the hunter, who was left without means of defence except his clubbed gun and a short-handled hunting ax.

One blow on the bear's head with the gun shattered the weapon and Mr. Floyd found himself obliged to stand up within reach of the bear's claws and defend himself with his short-handled ax. It was give and take for some minutes, at the end of which time the hunter's clothing was almost torn from him and he had received several bad flesh wounds. The bear was fast growing weaker. In stepping back to avoid a blow from one of its paws Floyd caught his heel in a root and fell to the ground. The bear tumbled after him and fell partially on Floyd's body. Floyd says he must have lost consciousness from pure fright, for he remembered nothing else until suddenly coming to his senses he found himself lying exactly where he fell and the bear lying dead beside him.

Harvesting Potatoes.

A newspaper correspondent says: "It is a little early to begin talking about harvesting potatoes, perhaps, but a word in season is better than advice too late. I have seen so many mistakes made with this crop at harvest time and have made so many expensive blunders myself, I would like to prevent inexperienced readers from similar loss and annoyance if I can. Experience has taught me the folly of digging potatoes that are to be kept through the winter before the tubers are quite ripe and the vines are thoroughly dead. In the first place, if dug before this period the skin is liable to peel off and result in decay. Then, too, the potatoes are in the best place possible, when left in the soil where they have grown, until there is cool, clear weather to harvest them in. When dug and stored too early potatoes are liable to rot in either cellar or bin. Even when there is not to contend with I believe in leaving the potatoes in the ground. It seems to me that exposing the diseased tubers to the air only hastens the rotting process. I have them in the ground until the vines are quite dead, and seldom dig when the soil is dry and warm. THE FLORIDA OSTRICH FARM.

How the Great Birds Are Doing at Sylvan Lake—Domestic Ostrich Feathers.

Good reports come from the Florida ostrich farm, in which Mr. Charles Reiche, the well-known importer of animals, of New York, is a part owner. The farm is at Sylvan Lake, Fla., under the charge of Mr. Charleton Jones. It was started last October by the importation of three pairs of fine ostriches three years old, brought from Nubia by Mr. Reiche. In conversation with a Telegram reporter, he said:—"This farm, of course, was started to make money, and accordingly we have chosen the best spot we could find for raising the birds. The land about Sylvan Lake is high and dry, and the climate warm, just what the birds need. Since their advent in Florida they have been doing well. How ostrich farming is a new business here, but we expect to make a success of it. The birds we have now are thriving; no accident has happened to them, and their first crop of feathers we expect this year. Of course that is the most important branch of the industry, and to have a good crop of feathers is a very desirable thing. When young the ostrich's back is covered with a straggling lot of white and black quills, underneath which is a thick coating of brownish down. In the course of three or four months these disappear, and elementary feathers are formed, and at the end of the year the first clipping of feathers takes place.

"The first crop, however, is not a good one, and it is only after some little time that the yield is valuable. In the wing is a row of about twenty-four magnificent long white feathers called 'primaries.' These are the choice of the picking, and on account of their position are so protected from the air that they are snowy white. From this row forward, on the wing, the feathers are more or less intermixed with gray, until they finally end in either pure gray or black, according to sex. But very often birds are possessed of two, and sometimes as many as four, rows of these pure white feathers, numbering together some sixty or seventy. Such birds are naturally very valuable, not only for their wealth of plumage, but for the possibility that they may breed chicks having the same peculiarity. Tail feathers vary much in size, length and number, and do not realise so much to the farmer on account of their liability to become soiled. Still, the dresser and dealer realise a good deal out of them by careful manipulation. To clip an ostrich, a single one is driven into a pen just large enough to enable it to move about and a bag is tied over its head, leaving but a hole large enough for it to breathe through. Then the wings are lifted and the feathers taken off one by one. Generally the birds submit to this operation quietly, but sometimes they get angry and thrash around. If our farm is a success it may only be the precursor of others, and I see no reason why they may not be successful. The business in South Africa is immense, amounting to as much as $8,000,000 annually in feathers alone. That represents a good many farmers, but just imagine the hot, dry spaces we have in this country that might be utilized. We may in time be one of the great ostrich feather markets of the world."

Dress Trimmings.

Passementeries are being largely imported, Harper's Bazar tells us, both in wide borders and in separate ornaments, to be placed irregularly on different parts of the dress. Chenille and jet beads are also introduced in many new ways in these trimmings, and are arranged in pendants that fall from the centres of large flowers or other figures. A novelty for wool dresses is an applique trimming made up of plain colored cloths covered with soutache braids that are rounded out at the ends to form fringe. Borders of marabout feathers are imported as a garniture for velvet wraps, and there are bands of cock plumes arranged in new ways, and also of many of the smoother feathers, such as those of the guinea-hen, partridge and pheasant. Birds' heads nestle in feather trimmings, and are to be placed irregularly on the costume. Velvet ribbons of unusual width are imported for bordering dress skirts, for bodys and for sashes, and the narrow velvet ribbons will be used in many parallel rows, as braid is now arranged. Heroules braid and silk galloons woven in new designs are among the trimmings for wool dresses. Soutache will remain in favor, but there is suggested a tendency for wider braids. Velvet cut from the piece will be used on cloth and poplin dresses when the more severe tailor trimmings of stitching and braid are objected to.

CHILTON VIEW.

Published Every Thursday Morning.

CLANTON, ALA., SEPT. 25, 1884.

Gov. Cleveland's worldly possessions consist of only five thousand dollars' worth of personal property. He has no real estate.

The estate of the late Arthur W. Austin, of Boston, which will eventually go to the University of Virginia, will amount to some $400,000.

It is said that Steve Elkins, the notorious Blaine manager, has abandoned West Virginia as hopelessly Democratic and has been flooding Ohio with all the money he could raise. So vanishes into thin air the programme of carrying a Southern State for Blaine.

The last spiritualistic apparatus consists of a telephonic diaphragm attached to the sounding board of a piano, and connected by a wire to a second piano in the immediate neighborhood. Music played upon the latter is reproduced upon the former, but more sweetly and delicately than when originally played. The device was detected in Providence after a very remunerative month's run.

An old soldier declares that the gallant Sheridan, when on duty thirty years ago in Texas, was the best singer of Irish songs and dancer of Irish jigs known in the whole regular army. "He was no bigger than he is now," this informant emphatically asserts, "but he was livelier, I guess, and I never go into a variety theatre that I don't see worse patter and trot (singing and dancing) than Phil Sheridan used to give us."

It is said that Mr. George W. Cable's paper to be read at Saratoga this month, on "The Relations of Southern Freedom to Labor," will deal some hard blows at the labor system of the south, and asserts that the criminal laws are unequally enforced, bearing with more severity on the colored race than on the white. The New York Tribune says that some of Mr. Cable's friends consider the paper ill-advised and fear that it will subject him to a broadside from the southern press.

In 1868 James G. Blaine received for his influence certain bonds of the Little Rock and Fort Smith railroad and $15,000 cash. He wrote several compromising letters to W. Fisher. These letters fell into the hands of James Mulligan. Fearing that these letters would be laid before a congressional investigating committee, Blaine borrowed them from Mulligan, solemnly promising to return them, but instead of doing so he kept them. The letters are now known as the Mulligan letters.

The Democratic nominations for Congress in Alabama have all been made. They are as follows: First district—James T. Jones—succeeds himself. Second district—Hillary A. Herbert—succeeds himself. Third district—Wm. C. Oates—succeeds himself. Fourth district—Alex. C. Davidson—succeeds C. M. Shelly. Fifth district—Thos. W. Sadler—succeeds Thomas Williams. Sixth district—John M. Martin—succeeds G. W. Hewitt. Seventh district—Wm. H. Forney—succeeds himself. Eighth district—Joseph Wheeler—succeeds Luke Pryor.

Wonders certainly never cease and Shepardville, O., is ready to furnish the world at large and the medical fraternity in particular with the latest, and probably one of the greatest of modern times. One of our town physicians, Dr. C. J. Cook was called to-day to attend a case of labor for a negro woman about a mile from here, and much to the surprise of both physician and patient twins were born. The boy was as black as could be desired by the mother but the girl is perfectly white and her features, hair and limbs are strictly Anglo-Saxon. The mother and children are doing splendidly.

The Rev. Edward Eggleston, the well known writer, who was for some time pastor of the Church of Christian Endeavor, Lee avenue, Brooklyn, says in a letter from Lake George: "No reasonable man not blinded by party zeal can doubt, it seems to me, that Gov. Cleveland is the man most likely to administer the government in such a way as to leave it better and no worse than it is now. To put the administration of a reform civil service into the hands of the republican nominee is to set an old bird to watch the pool."

BLAINE EXPLAINS THE SCANDAL.

The Story of a Clandestine Marriage—Very Interesting Information.

NEW YORK, Sept. 19.—Hon. William Walter Phelps takes the responsibility of giving to the public the following private letter addressed to him nearly two weeks ago:

AUGUSTA, Sept. 6, 1884.

My Dear Mr. Phelps—I have your favor of the 4th advising me that the continuous invention and wide circulation of evil reports render it advisable in your judgment not to wait the slow process of the law, but to speak directly to the people in my own vindication. In this opinion many others on whose judgment I rely concur. I shrink instinctively from the suggestion, although I feel sure I could strengthen the confidence of all who are friendly to me by bringing to view a simple thread of truth which is concealed in this endless tissue of falsehood. You can imagine how inexpressibly painful it must be to discuss my domestic life in the press, although I think with you that under the circumstances I could count upon the generosity of the public to justify a statement which otherwise might seem objectionable. I can, in any event, safely commit facts to you for personal communication to those who have taken so delicate and so considerate an interest in my affairs. The leisure hours of to-day when our campaign is ended and we wait only for election, give me the opportunity for this prompt reply and for the following essential details:

In Georgetown, Ky., in the spring of 1848, when I was but 18 years of age, I first saw the lady who for more than thirty years has been my wife. Our acquaintance resulted at the end of six months in an engagement which, without prospect of speedy marriage, we naturally sought to keep to ourselves. Two years later, in the spring of 1850, when I was maturing plans to leave my profession in Kentucky and establish myself elsewhere I was suddenly summoned home by the death of my father. It being very doubtful if I could return to Kentucky I was threatened with an indefinite separation from her who possessed my entire devotion. My one wish was to secure her to myself by an indissoluble tie against every possible contingency in life, and on the 30th day of June, 1850, just prior to my departure, we were, in the presence of chosen and trusted friends, united by what I knew was in my State of Pennsylvania a perfectly legal form of marriage. On reaching home I found that my family and especially my bereaved mother strongly discountenanced my business plans involving too long a separation from home and kindred. I complied with her wish that I should resume at least for a time my occupation in Kentucky, whither I returned in the latter part of August. During the ensuing winter, induced by misgivings under new responsibilities—misgivings which were increased by legal consultations—I became alarmed lest doubt might be thrown upon the validity of our marriage by reason of non-compliance with the law of the State where it had occurred, for I had learned that the laws of Kentucky made license certified by the clerk of the county court an indispensable requisite of legal marriage. After much deliberation and with an anxious desire to guard in the most effectual manner against any possible embarrassment, resulting from our position, for which I alone was responsible, we decided that the simplest and at the same time the surest way was to repair to Pennsylvania and have another marriage service performed. This was done in the presence of witnesses in the city of Pittsburg in March, 1851, but was not made public for obvious reasons. It was solemnized only to secure an indisputable validity, the first marriage being by my wife and myself always held sacred. At the mature age of 54 I do not defend the wisdom or prudence of secret marriage suggested by the ardor and inexperience of youth, but its honor and its purity were inviolate as I believe in the sight of God, and can not be made to appear otherwise by the wicked devices of men. It brought to me the companionship which has been my chief happiness from boyhood to this year, and has crowned me with whatever success I have attained in life. My eldest child, a son, was born in his grandmother's house on the 18th day of June, 1851, in the city of Augusta, Maine, and died in her arms three years later. His ashes repose in the cemetery of his native city, beneath a stone which recorded his name and the limits of his innocent life. That stone which has stood for almost an entire generation has been recently defaced by brutal and sacreligious hands.

As a candidate for President I knew that I should encounter many forms of calumny and personal defamation, but I did not expect to be called upon to defend the name of my beloved and honored wife, who is a grandmother, nor did I expect that the grave of my little child would be cruelly desecrated. Against such gross forms of wrong, law gives no adequate redress, and I know that in the end my most effective appeal against the unspeakable outrages which I resist must be to the noble manhood and noble womanhood of America. Your friend, very sincerely, JAMES G. BLAINE.

"Gath" says: The southern states have been struck with the local option fever, partly because strong drink has become the bane of both domestic order and personal career in that section where so much spirits are distilled, and partly because there being no minority party on general issues in the south, divisions are taking place on religious and moral questions, with liquor in the foreground. He thinks that in the event of a republican defeat in Ohio in October there will be an enormous agitation of temperance all over the country next year. The question will cross sectional lines and put all political parties in terror. These moral questions disorganize parties and play the mischief with the plans of politicians. After the death of the Federalist party in New York the people split on a little question of Masonry and broke the dominant national party all to pieces. We all recollect the outcome of the slavery agitation. Just such a moral question as the whisky issue may set the country on fire.

How About It?

Section 750 of the code says: "It shall be the duty of the court of County Commissioners to make semi-annual publication, on the first day of January and July of each year, showing the receipts and expenditure of the money for the county, specifying particularly the sources from which received and the purposes for which expended." Section 2971 says: "In all cases where the publication of any notice is required by law to be made in this State, it shall be made by publication in some newspaper published in the county in which the notice is ordered, and if no newspaper is published in the county, then by written advertisement, posted at the court house door, and at three other public places in the county." Again, in section 4273 we find the following language: "If any Court of County Commissioners shall fail to publish semi-annual exhibits of the receipts and expenditure of moneys for and on account of their respective counties as required by law, each member of such Court shall be liable to indictment and fine not exceeding one hundred dollars for each offense."

The people pay their taxes and they have a right to know where every cent goes. It only costs each tax payer an infinitesimal part of a cent to know the receipts and expenditures of their county—hence we publish the above section of the Code.—Rutledge Enterprise.

The Colossal Fair in New Orleans.

Col. F. C. Morehead, Commissioner-General of the New Orleans World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition, reports that the main building and Horticultural Hall on the Exposition grounds are finished, the Government building is rapidly nearing completion, and the material for the art gallery and the factory and mills building is on the ground. The main building is the largest ever built. It is 1,378 feet long by 905 feet wide. It covers thirty-three acres, or twelve acres more than the capacity of the main structure in the Philadelphia Centennial. Yet it was found too small to satisfy the demands of exhibitors, and its room is to be reenforced by a 350-foot annex, for factories and mills, and by a huge building, 885 feet long by 565 feet wide, for the Government and separate State exhibits. The architectural designs are pleasing to the eye, and the principal building material is iron, though the Horticultural Hall is very largely of glass.

The Exposition is to be held under the auspices of the National Cotton Planters' Association, in the mind of whose President, Col. Morehead, the project originated, the charter and the Government loan of a million of dollars having also been very largely due to, his efforts. Fifteen thousand cotton planters will meet in convention at the Exposition to enjoy the realization of a plan that seemed visionary two years ago, but now seems likely to result in the greatest world's fair ever held.

A man is living in Switzerland who takes all of his food from the end of a stick. His daughter had been in Marseilles as a nurse, and returned with all her clothing. She soon died, together with her sister and sister-in-law, and the old father has not since passed beyond his little patch of land. Persons who wish to see him at his boundary throw a stone at his door.

The letter of Blaine explaining his marriage, which we publish elsewhere, is a direct appeal to the sympathies of the ignorant and weak minded. The Republican candidate had no doubt planned this appeal when he first decided to sue the Indianapolis paper for libel.

We are doing job work as cheap as any office in five hundred miles of this place. Parties having any work would save money by getting our figures before placing their orders.

Maplesville Dots.

Weather dry and fearfully dusty. No prospect of rain soon.

Miss Oaty is again with her sister, Mrs. Douthit.

Maplesville has been quite a resort for Selmians during the summer.

Mr. N. W. Foshee has again started his steam gin at this place.

Mr. J. D. Waterworth has moved into his new residence.

Mr. N. W. Foshee who had the misfortune to break his arm a few days ago, is considerably better.

Callierville Dots.

The continued dry weather has greatly shortened the cotton crops, but has greatly helped the harvesting of hay. We understand that Mr. W. L. Parnell will make more from his hay crop than he will from his cotton.

Mr. Tom. Parnell has almost stopped grinding and ginning on account of the water being very low.

Messrs. Houston, Carter & Co. have purchased an engine to run on their tram road.

Miss Thrashide, a young lady from New Orleans, is visiting Mrs. Lile.

Miss Lula king and Miss Brown have gone to the camp meeting.

Bravo! Dixie can boast of its base ball club. Dixie club challenged Plantersville club. The two clubs played at Welsh's mill. Dixie victorious. But the boys have spoiled it all by playing on Sunday. What a shame! A lady was greatly amazed on last Sabbath by a loud noise, and on going to the door to ascertain the cause, to her great surprise she saw a lot of boys at the station playing base ball. Does this show a civilized community.

Several of the Summer boarders of the Clifton House have returned to their homes.

Mr. F. A. Gulledge has completed and moved into his new store.

Messrs. C. L. Reid and S. K. Williamson have consolidated their mercantile interests under the firm name of Reid & Williamson, and have rented the Mullins store house.

Miss Hattie Clisby, has returned to her home, from a lengthy visit to friends in Lynchburg, Va.

The charming Miss Wilsie Lanier, who has been spending the Summer at this place, has returned to her home in Montgomery. Her departure is sincerely regretted by her many friends and admirers.

The building boom continues, Messrs. H. C. Humes and W. F. Claughton are both building residences and it is rumored that Mr. F. H. Brooks will build at an early date.

From the extensive preparations that are being made by the merchants of this place they are expecting an immense trade this Fall. There is no reason why they should not do a big business for they pay as much for cotton and sell goods as close as Montgomery, Selma and other large cities, come one, come all and be convinced.

Dead Men Don't Advertise.

It can be safely laid down as a rule that in these days of universal advertising the man who don't advertise either has nothing for sale which will bear talking about or he is so old fogyish in his methods of business that he has got so far behind the times that he will never catch up. There is no surer evidence of snap and energy in a business man or firm than liberal advertising. In the store or warerooms of a large advertiser the purchaser finds the latest styles, the best material, the most approved patterns, the most reliable goods and the most advanced business methods. Advertising pays, not only in the matter of attracting customers, which is the legitimate aim of all advertisements, but it enables the reader to see who are the really live and energetic men in any line of business, and by keeping them constantly in mind the reader of the paper can avoid the old fogy tradesman whose greatest mistake in life has been in not getting buried twenty-five years ago. Dead men don't advertise.

TUTT'S PILLS
TORPID BOWELS, DISORDERED LIVER, and MALARIA.
From these sources arise three-fourths of the diseases of the human race. These symptoms indicate their existence: Loss of Appetite, Bowels costive, Sick Headache, Fullness after eating, aversion to exertion of body or mind, Eructation of food, Irritability of temper, Low spirits, A feeling of having neglected some duty, Dizziness, Fluttering of the Heart, Dots before the eyes, highly colored Urine, CONSTIPATION, and the most the use of this purely vegetable medicine. As a mild cathartic TUTT'S PILLS have no equal. Promoting digestion, healthy appetite, and sound flesh, they also invigorate the kidneys and skin in their power of expelling all impurities through these three natural scavengers of the system, producing pure blood, vigorous health, regular habits, active bowels, and a vigorous body. If I am weak and you are strong,
Why then, why then,
To you the braver deeds belong;
And so, again,
If you have gifts and I have none,
If I have shade and you have sun,
'Tis yours with freer hand to give,
'Tis yours with truer grace to live,
Than I, who giftless, cumless, stand,
With barren life and hand.

We do not ask the little brook
To turn the wheel;
Upon the larger stream we look.
The strength of steel
We do not ask from silken bands,
Nor heart of oaks in willow wands;
We do not ask the wren to go
Up to the heights the eagles know;
Nor yet expect the lark's clear note
From out the dove's dumb throat.

The wisdom's law, the perfect code,
By love inspired;
Of him on whom much is bestowed
Is much required.
The tuneful throat is bid to sing,
The oak must reign the forest's king;
The rushing stream the wheel must move,
The beaten steel its strength must prove,
'Tis given unto the eagle's eyes
To face the midday skies.

A NIGHT'S ADVENTURE.

"Ah, sir, I see you're admiring my flowers! Well, they are pretty—that they are—though I doubt as some would call the marigolds and carnations common and old-fashioned. You don't see many of 'em now in your fine new-fangled gardens, do you? It's a pretty little place this, ain't it, sir? And it's my own, too—my very own—and will go to my grandson after me. He's a good lad, he is—it's him as looks after the garden. Mighty fond of flowers he is, and rarely proud he'll be, I know, when he hears as a fine town gentleman has taken notice of 'em! Ah, I was fond of gardening, too, in my time! But I'm getting an old man now—eighty-five I am come Christmas—and I can't expect to be spared much longer, though I'm hale and hearty yet, thank heaven! Ah, times have altered, sir, since my young days! For the better, you say? Well, things are grander now than they were then, but somehow I seem to like the old times best, perhaps because I was young and strong in 'em. And talking of old times reminds me of something that once happened to me. Like to hear it, sir? Well, so you shall, and welcome, if you don't mind wasting an hour or so with an old chap like me. Sit down, then, on that bench and make yourself comfortable.

"You've been to Chelmsford perhaps? Then maybe you know the 'Saracen's Head?' Well, close to where that now stands there used to be an old inn called the 'Swan.' A queer old place it was to be sure, with its casement windows and overhanging gables. I was living at Ralphan—it's nigh upon sixty years ago—a farmer I was, and had been married only a short time to a dear little wife as I loved well and true till she died, poor lass!

"One cold December day I started for Braintree, to look at some stock as I thought of buying. As it was a two days' journey, I meant to stop at Chelmsford for the night, and go on early the next day. I didn't leave home till about 2, and I had a weary road to travel, so that the darkness came on before I reached the gibbet on the edge of the common; and I can tell you my flesh crawled, as the saying is, when I galloped past at full speed. It was a bleak cold night, and the road was bad, so that it was late before I rode into Chelmsford.

"I put up at the 'Swan'—that being the first Inn I came to—and was standing watching the hostler rubbing down my good old mare—for I always attended to that first thing—when the landlord came slowly out to me; he was a short, sharp-faced man, with great black eyes that had an uneasy sort of look in 'em. I told him I'd had a long ride and was glad enough to get safe into his yard—for I'd gold about me and we'd heard horrible tales of the robberies and murders on the King's highway. Well, he showed me into a long low room—the kitchen it was—with a brick floor and a bright fire burning.

"'There's noisy lot in the parlor, sir,' said he; 'you'll be quiet and cosy here, for maybe you're tired and chilly after your ride in the wind.'

"I ordered a steak and some wine, and, as I ate my supper, I thought to myself that I couldn't well have chosen a better place than the 'Swan' to stop at. After I had finished I called for pipe and grog and sat by the fire with the landlord, but I might as well have been alone for he never spoke a word, but sat staring into the fire with a wicked look in his eyes that I didn't like, though I didn't take much notice of it then. Ah, I know now what his thoughts were as he gazed moodily into the glowing coals. He was thinking of the disgrace brought upon his name by his only son, and wondering where the money was to come from which must be procured somehow if his boy was to be saved from ruin. And then no doubt he planned to murder me—ah, it's all true, sir—I've got his confession by me now—and bury me down by the river-side, in the meadow behind the stable. Soon he meant to turn my mare out before dawn so that the servants might think I had left early; and then, you see, when it was found, people would think something had happened to me on the road to Braintree. Well, my companion roused himself after a time and began asking me what I thought of the country, if I had ridden far, whether I had been abroad to put up at the Swan, and such like questions. I answered them freely enough, never supposing that he asked them for any other reason than just to keep up the conversation. I asked him to call me early and he promised he would do so.

"'I'll do it myself,' said he, 'for then there will be none [illegible]'

"Then the room was dark and cold and I was glad to get into bed, where I was soon fast asleep. I don't know how long I had been asleep, but suddenly I was awakened by a hand upon my shoulder, and I started up in bed, quite awake enough, for I heard something or some one climbing up the ivy to my window. I lay with palpitating heart and straining eyes, listening to the horrible ghostly rustling which every moment sounded nearer.

"Suddenly a thought struck me; and I arose, hastily smoothing the bedclothes, as though the bed had not been slept in. I had just time to creep under the bed, when the window was shaken open and somebody softly slipped in. It was a man, and, listening intently, I heard him sigh wearily to himself, as if he were tired out. Then he got into my bed, drew the clothes over him and in a few minutes I heard him snoring. You can imagine how pleasant I felt, and the scamp had my money bag under his pillow, too! What was to be done? I thought of my happy home and the dear little wife now perhaps dreaming of me, and the thought of her gave me courage. I determined to snatch at my money and fight for it with the unseen visitor to the death, if need be. I was crawling from under the bed when I heard another sound, nearing the door this time. In a minute the latch was quietly lifted, the door was gently pushed open and I saw the landlord glide into the room. Then a hand holding a candle stole in at the door—only a hand; but I knew those quivering fingers well enough. The man crept on tiptoe to the bed and, leaning softly over the sleeper, stabbed him to the heart. There was one deep groan and all was over. The murderer drew the money from under the pillow and crept stealthily to the door, glancing behind him as though he feared the dead man would get up and follow him.

"Shaking all over and with hair on end I crawled from my hiding-place, groped about for my clothes, and, after standing a moment, dazed with horror, followed the guilty couple. Their room was almost opposite mine, and I could see the light under their door, which was barely closed. I pushed it open and peeped in. The table faced the door, and there they stood with their backs to me, so intent upon the money that I crept close to them without being heard.

"'Look, look,' I heard the man whisper—'there is more than enough to save our boy! How they shine! And all ours, wife—ours!'

"'No, mine, murderer!' I shouted, with a voice of thunder, and, snatching the bag from his nerveless grasp, I dashed the light from the woman's hand and fled back swiftly to the room where the dead man lay.

"Opening the window, I groped about with one hand for an ivy bough, clinging somehow to the sill with the other, and at last managed to scramble down, reaching the ground bruised, shaken, breathless. As I rested a moment to get my breath, I heard from the room above an awful cry sung out in a woman's voice—

"'My boy, my boy, my only son!'

"I clambered over the gate which led into the street. A watch-box stood close by in the square, and I hurriedly told my story to the watchman. He started in horror, as well he might, and wanted to fetch his mate; but I told him we were more than a match for those we should find at the inn, so he came with me. A frightened servant opened the door to us, and I led the way to the room I had just quitted. The watchman bent down and peered into the dead man's face.

"'Ah,' he whispered, 'it's as I feared! It's their own son—they didn't know he was home, and so they mistook him for you, sir.'

"I felt myself turn queer and giddy, for I knew the meaning of that pitiful cry 'My only son!'

"And what of the murderers? They had not so much as tried to escape, and the door wasn't even barred against us. The woman lay moaning on the floor; the man sat huddled up in a chair by the bed. When we entered he held out his hands to be manacled without uttering a word. When I told him how it happened that his son had fallen a victim instead of me, he just stared in my face and made no sign that he heard the tale.

"Well, sir, that's about all. The mother, poor soul, died raving mad, and the man was hanged at Tyburn; but not another word did he speak from first to last, save once—and that was when the Judge passed sentence on him. Then he raised his head, and, with a look in his eyes which I can never forget, he said:

"'An old, old man, my lord—my only son!'

"That's all, sir. The strangest story you ever heard? Well, I dare say it is; but it's all true, every word of it; for I've got the papers to prove it, and, if you'll be pleased to come in and see 'em, you'll be welcome as flowers in May, that you will! Not now? Well, then, I'll bid you good day, and thank you kindly for letting me talk to you, for it does me good to chat a bit sometimes, that it does! Good day, sir, and a pleasant walk to you!"

LIGHTNING AT PLAY.

EXTRAORDINARY FREAKS ON THE WIRE CLOTHES-LINES IN MATAMORAS, PA.

Peculiar Experience of a Lady Whose House Was Struck by the Fluid.

A letter from Matamoras, Pa., says: While Seymour Caykendall and his family were sitting quietly at dinner, on Tuesday, during a terrible thunder storm, three excited neighbors burst into the house and wanted to know if any of the family were hurt or killed. That was the first the Caykendalls knew that lightning had struck their house, and that the fluid had been playing all over and about it. The bolt had struck the roof near the chimney, tearing a hole through it as big as a tub. It did not enter the house, but dividing in three parts, coursed in different directions over it. One portion of the current flashed along the roof to the south end of the house, another traveled north, and the third took an eastward course along the ridgepole of an extension. The current that went south slid down a veranda post, which it scattered in slivers about the yard, and entered the ground. The division of the current which took the opposite direction also started for the ground on a veranda post, but, when half way down, met the end of a wire clothesline which was fastened to the post. Switching off on to this line the fluid was conducted to a tall post at the other end of the wire. This post it made short work of, and then leaped to the ground at the side of a coal house in an adjoining yard twelve feet away.

Plowing a channel for itself in under this coal house from one side to the other, the fluid turned upward and struck a chicken coop at a spot where another wire clothesline was fastened. Tearing away a portion of the siding on the hen house, the current followed the wire to its terminus on an outhouse, which it scattered about the garden and then buried itself in the ground. Still another wire ran parallel with the one on which this portion of the original bolt made its last journey and five feet distant. A linen handkerchief was hanging on this line, and as the current passed it on the other wire the handkerchief parted in a zigzag tear ascending from the bottom to the top. That portion of the fluid which had passed along the ridgepole of the extension left the roof at one corner, and in passing down also came in contact with a wire clothesline, followed it to another yard, where it tore an outhouse to pieces and disappeared in the ground.

The electrical display at Caykendall's house was hardly over when lightning struck a tall pole in Charles Leppert's yard, on the same street. There the partiality of Matamoras people for wire clothesalines came in good play again for the lightning. One was attached to the pole, whence it extended to the corner of the house, and then to a hen house at the lower end of the garden. Next to the hen house was a hop vine, next to that a flourishing grape vine, and near the two a gay-colored bed of flowers. The fluid ran along the wire to the corner of the house, and tore off a portion of the siding. It then passed along to the hen house, where it did but little damage, playing simultaneously about the hop vine, grape vine, and flower bed, and then disappeared. The vines and plants—leaves, stalks, flowers and all—were here changed to a coal black in the twinkling of an eye. At the moment the lightning struck the corner of the dwelling Mrs. Leppert was in a room in the second story. She felt a severe blow on the right side of her head, which stunned her for an instant. Then a peculiar numbness passed over her left side and leg. This soon passed away, and was followed by a burning sensation in two spots on the hip. Mrs. Leppert found two black and blue spots the size of a dime where she had felt the burning.

The play of electricity about the village during the storm was almost unbroken for twenty minutes, but no other damage was done.

A Wonderful Discovery.

The Danville (N. Y.) Advertiser says Mr. A. N. Cole, of Wellsville, the veteran ex-editor, has made discoveries in the matter of irrigation, and secured a patent therefor, which seem destined to work a great revolution in the value of lands. By his system he grows strawberries to the size of peaches, and increases the size, beauty, and perfection of all fruits to a degree to defy credence. He says in a letter in the Wellsville Free Press: "I grow such turnips, beets, cabbage, and cauliflower as have never been seen on the Atlantic coast. A full bushel of tomatoes to the plant can be grown, and that, too, of marvelous size and beauty. As stated in previous articles, a thousand bushels of pea pods can be grown to the acre. All forms, in short, of vegetable growth are so developed, as to do away with fungus, deadliest enemy of plant life, securing root, stalk, bud, blossom, and fruit in completest perfection. This is done by hanging up on our hillsides in a succession of trenches, deep dug into the hard pan, aggregations of water to be held in reserve till they find their way by the laws of gravity, in even and uniform currents of subterranean flow to the streams in the valleys, securing such perfection of irrigation to their track as to give to plant life inspiration such as has never before been so much as approximated."

LEMEA.—The editor of the New York Journalist says: Probably no men have had more libel suits to contest than the editors of this paper, and they are free to confess, and it is the result of a wide experience, that they would sooner be libeled than let alone in a libel suit at any time than the plaintiffs and prosecutors. It is to prove the defendant's allegations that is humanly impossible to make a case, but before they [illegible]

A QUESTION OF INSURANCE.

An Interesting Query Upon an Important Subject Answered.

From R. P., Fairbault, Minn—A question of insurance arises which I would like to see answered through the paper. A house that was built some 18 months ago, and which had been finished inside by painting and papering, was partially destroyed by fire. The roof was burned off before the fire department succeeded in arresting the flames. As a consequence, the rooms were flooded with water and the plaster was wet through and the paint damaged or ruined by the flames. Although the home was insured, the general agent of the company did not adjust the loss for some two weeks after the fire. During this time the walls and woodwork were still further wet by melted snow and rain. The question arises: Is the insurance company responsible for damage done by fire and water or only by fire?

Answer.—We think that the question that our correspondent raises is probably one of fact, and is to be answered solely by the conditions of the policy which was written on the risk mentioned. By examination of that instrument it will probably be found that the liability in this case, as in others, depends upon the conditions in the policy. In general terms we believe it is the custom of insurance companies to guarantee a loss from fire in the broad sense that it covers, also, damages that may be incidental to the process of putting out the fire. In the large cities the insurance companies sometimes maintain what is called an Insurance Patrol. This consists of a corps of well-trained men with all necessary appliances for protecting goods that may be in a building at the time of a fire, and which would be damged by the water if not cared for. The insurance companies find it cheaper to take care of property in this way than to pay what they would otherwise be liable for under their policies. If our correspondent's question with reference to the insurance companies' liability for damage from water refers to the damage done by the rain and melted snow subsequent to the fire and during the period which elapsed between the time of the fire and the date of the adjustment, a point is raised that we are scarcely prepared to answer. The liability of a company, in all probability, would depend largely upon circumstances. If the building during this interval was practically in the hands of the insurance company pending an adjustment of the loss, and on this account was out of the control of the owner, so that he was unable to protect his property, it would seem that, in equity at least, the insurance company should make up the additional loss. What the law may be, or what custom may recognize in the district in which our correspondent is located, we cannot say. We suggest that it would be a very difficult matter to determine what amount of loss was sustained by the damage done the building subsequent to the fire on account of water, and what occurred at the time of the fire. Sometimes insurance companies consider it to their advantage to restore a building to its original condition rather than pay the amount of policy, and they frequently reserve the right to do this. If such a clause existed in the policy in question, and if the company had finally decided to rebuild the building, it is very evident that any loss that was sustained subsequent to the fire and before the work of rebuilding was commenced would fall upon the insurance company. No one would ever think of a claim being entered against the owner for it. This view of the case would seem to indicate that the insurance company, in equity, at least, is liable for the damages which result directly and indirectly from the fire, from the time that that fire occurs until a settlement has been made and the property restored to the owner. If any of our readers have had any experience in matters of this kind we shall be glad to have statements from them for publication.

Collect on Delivery.

A man who had not been long in this country was employed as a domestic in a family, and upon one occasion he was sent to the express office to obtain a package. He was about to leave with it when the clerk called his attention to the three letters C. O. D.

Pat had no idea what the letters meant, but he cleverly guessed at them.

"It's all right," he said; "the ould man's good for the money."

"But you know what those letters say, Pat?"

"Indade, I do. Call on Dad. It's as plane as the nose on your face."

There is almost a pathetic truth in the understanding conveyed in this old story. Many a man is hounded to death by the unreasonable calls made upon him by members of his family who are taught up to this end by himself, at first in that fond, slavish spirit of indulgence which the American father displays toward his offspring, as if it were some kind of an unthinking mechanical pet, and afterwards on the unfailing principle that they who sow the wind will reap the whirlwind.

Call on dad.

Business is dull, notes must be met, but appearances must be kept up. Mrs. Shoddy is going to the seashore. "Our girls" must go, the money is to come out of "Dad."

Absurd be refuses firmly, but as one reason after another is brought to bear on him, like a battering ram of persuasion, he gives way. New bonnets and dresses are bought, a railway journey's expenses defrayed, and that is only the beginning. Incidental expenses are always the straws that break the patient camel's back. They accumulate in heaps ahead, and at last close to the shore of a convenient station where the [illegible]

A Remedy for Hay Fever.

Dr. Robert Newton, late president of the Eclectic college, of the city of New York, and formerly of Cincinnati, Ohio, used Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam very extensively in his practice, as many of his patients, now living and restored to health by the use of this invaluable medicine, can amply testify. He always said that so good a remedy ought not to be considered merely as a patent medicine, but that it ought to be prescribed freely by every physician as a sovereign remedy in all cases of lung diseases. It cures consumption, and all pectoral complaints.

Raleigh, North Carolina, has a female base ball club.

are the records of some of the cures of consumption effected by that most wonderful remedy—Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery." Thousands of grateful men and women, who have been snatched almost from the very jaws of death, can testify that consumption, in its early stages, is no longer incurable. The Discovery has no equal as a pectoral and alterative, and the most obstinate affections of the throat and lungs yield to its power. All druggists.

The following is a case in point: "I paid out hundreds of dollars without receiving any benefit," says Mrs. Emily Hussels of Milford, Mich. "I had female complaints, especially dragging down pains, for over six years. Dr. R. V. Pierce's Favorite Prescription did me more good than any medicine I ever took. In fact, it has done me more than all the doctors and medicine I have ever taken." Sold by druggists.

DAFFLED!

One of the Most Unaccountable and Dangerous of Recent Results Discovered and Explained.

There is some mysterious trouble that is attacking nearly everyone in the land with more or less violence. It seems to steal into the body like a thief in the night. Doctors cannot diagnosis it. Scientists are puzzled by its symptoms. It is, indeed, a modern mystery. Like those severe and vague maladies that attack horses and prostrate nearly all the animals in the land, this subtle trouble seems to menace mankind. Many of its victims have pains about the chest and sides, and sometimes in the back. They feel dull and sleepy; the mouth has a bad taste, especially in the morning. A strange sticky slime collects about the teeth. The appetite is poor. There is a feeling like a heavy load upon the stomach; sometimes a faint all-gone sensation is felt at the pit of the stomach, which food does not satisfy. The eyes grow sunken, the hands and feet feel clammy at one time and burn intensely at others. After a while a cough sets in, at first dry, but after a few months it is attended with a greyish colored expectoration. The afflicted one feels tired all the while, and sleep does not seem to afford any rest. He becomes nervous, irritable, and gloomy, and has evil forebodings. There is a giddiness, a peculiar whirling sensation in the head when rising up suddenly. The bowels become costive, and then, again, outflux intensely; the skin is dry and hot at times, the blood grows thick and stagnant; the whites of the eyes become tinged with yellow; the urine is scanty and high-colored; depositing a sediment after standing. There is frequently a spitting up of the food, sometimes with a sour taste, and sometimes with a sweetish taste: this is often attended with palpitation of the heart. The vision becomes impaired, with spots before the eyes: there is a feeling of prostration and great weakness. Most of these symptoms are in turn present. It is thought that nearly one-third of our population have this disorder in some of its varied forms, while medical men have almost wholly mistaken its nature. Some have treated it for one complaint; some for another, but nearly all have failed to reach the seat of the disorder. Indeed, many physicians are afflicted with it themselves. The experience of Dr. A. G. Richards, residing at No. 468 Tremont street, Boston, is thus described by himself:

"I had all those peculiar and painful symptoms which I have found afflicting so many of my patients, and which had so often baffled me. I knew all the commonly established remedies would be unavailing for I had tried them often in the past. I therefore determined to strike out in a new path. To my intense satisfaction I found that I was improving. The dull, stupid feeling departed and I began to enjoy life once more. My appetite returned. My sleep was refreshing. The color of my face, which had been a sickly yellow gradually assumed the pink tinge of health. In the course of three weeks I felt like a new man, and know that it was wholly owing to the wonderful efficiency of Warner's Tippecanoe The Best, which was all the medicine I took."

Doctors and scientists often exhaust their skill and the patient dies. They try everything that has been used by, or is known to the profession, and then fail. Even if they save the life it is often after great and prolonged agony. Where all this can be avoided by precaution and care, how insane a thing it is to endure such suffering! With a pure and palatable preparation within reach, to neglect its use is simply inexcusable.

THE TERRIBLE CONSEQUENCES.—People have been very busy in France lately predicting the terrible consequences which will ensue from the re-establishment of divorce. Here is one. A young man gets a divorce and marries a second time; but the mother of his first wife has been divorced, too, and has married the father of his second wife. Thus the young man has changed his wife but not his mother-in-law. Where, then, is the profit on the transaction?

THE WAY IT IS SAID.

The Sultan awoke with a stifled scream;
His nerves were shocked by a fearful dream;
An omen of terrible import and doubt
His teeth in one moment all fell out.

His wisemen assembled at break of day,
And stood by the throne in solemn array.

And when the terrible dream was told,
Each felt a shudder, his blood ran cold;

And all stood silent in fear and dread,
And wondering what was best to be said.

At length an old soothsayer, wrinkled and gray,
Cried, "Pardon, my lord, what I have to say:

"'Tis an omen of sorrow sent from on high—
Thou shalt see all thy kindred die."

Wroth was the Sultan; he gnashed his teeth,
And his very words seemed to hiss and seethe,

As he ordered the wiseman bound with chains,
And gave him a hundred stripes for his pains.

The wisemen shook as the Sultan's eye
Swept round to see who next would try;

But one of them stepping before the throne,
Exclaimed in a loud and joyous tone:

"Exult, Oh head of a happy State!
Rejoice, Oh heir of a glorious fate!

"For this is the favor thou shalt win,
Oh, Sultan—to outlive all thy kin!"

Pleased was the Sultan, and called a slave,
And a hundred crowns to the wiseman gave.

But the courtiers, they nod with grave, sly winks,
And each one whispers what each one thinks,

"Well can the Sultan reward and blame;
Didn't both the wisemen foretell the same?"

Quoth the crafty old Vizier, shaking his head,
"So much may depend on the way a thing's said!"

A CORNER IN NICKELS.

A TRUE STORY.

Not long ago the Government of the United States began to coin nickel five-cent pieces of a new pattern. But after a few thousand had been struck off it was decided that they were unsuitable, and the coinage was stopped.

The fact that so few were sent out made these five-cent pieces very valuable to persons forming collections of coins, because they were so scarce that by and bye none could be picked up among the change handed about in trading.

Many a wide-awake boy got a hint of this and profited by it. How it caused one of the schools in a certain Connecticut town to become a sort of Bourse or Wall street, and two youngsters in particular to resemble speculators, is the little story I have to tell.

One of the boys we will call Wyx and the other Jordan. The former was a "bull," the latter a "bear," in the money market which sprang up in this emergency as quickly as, during the late war, a trade in gold was organized in New York, where profits were gained or lost according as the value of the gold dollar in greenbacks rose or fell.

Wyx's father was a banker, and, therefore, he became "posted" on the value the coins would probably take a little ahead of others, and, in addition to a supply procured at his father's bank, he went about for several days buying up nickels of his school-fellows and everybody else he could meet, paying six and seven cents apiece for them, until he thought he had secured all there were in that neighborhood.

He also felt pretty sure that none of his schoolmates could get many, if any more, while he had a chance to do so, on account of his father's position. As the men who deal in money and railway stocks in the city would say, he tried to make a "corner" in these coins. If he succeeded, of course he could ask what he pleased for them (for he would have no opposition), provided anybody wanted to buy badly enough to pay a high price.

There is a great risk in making a corner in some article which is not necessary. If more than a moderate figure is asked people will refuse to purchase, and the wrong-doing of a man who seeks to charge too much will thus correct itself, even where he has a monopoly. It therefore happens that men who attempt to make corners usually choose something which people must have at any price—such as wheat, or lard, or pig-iron; yet they rarely succeed, because when a man takes that position he arrays the whole country against him, and no matter how rich and powerful he may be, it is all but impossible to gather into one corner, as you would pen a field of sheep, all there is of one kind of thing in a great region like the broad United States.

But I have been led into a long digression. Let us go back to the attempt at a corner in new nickels which occurred in that Connecticut school district.

Thinking that he had bought in all there were afloat in the neighborhood, and that now was the time to sell at a profit, or to "realize," as the brokers call it, Wyx announced one day that he was coming to school next morning with heaps of nickels, which he would sell at ten cents apiece.

The boys began to be sorry that they had been so hasty during the previous ten days in letting Wyx have their half-dozen or so each, at only a cent or two advance, and having grown excited over the way the values had risen, were now quite willing to buy back at the advanced rate, and a lot were besides, believing they would go still higher. In fact some even were also Master Wyx was to make a great deal of money. Certainly that is the way he regarded it, and he strutted about with his hat tipped on the back of his head in the most approved Stock Exchange swagger.

In these operations, let me say, both the seller and the buyers were taking the right course. Acting on his belief that the coins would become worth more a few days hence than they then were, Wyx had shown good sense in securing all he could honestly get and pay for. Now, as a matter of fact, and as Wyx foresaw would happen, they had risen, and were really saleable to collectors down town at ten cents, and sometimes for more. The other boys were quite right, therefore, in buying them back at that higher rate, and might charge the difference which they had lost to the account of acquiring knowledge—which is only bought by experience, and that is usually paid for in cash!

Now, among the boys at that school was Jordan. Morning and evening he peddled newspapers, and had grown sharp. He learned when he went home that afternoon that his father was just going to a bank to receive some money. Seeing his opportunity, the lad begged his father to take five dollars of the payment in the new nickels. These he could get by asking for them (provided the bank had so many) at their "face value"—that is, five cents.

This fact was what Wyx had depended upon nobody's knowing; but it happened that Jordan did know it, and sometimes a very simple bit of knowledge, speedily acted upon, is worth a great deal, as it proved in this case, for Mr. Jordan succeeded in obtaining the five dollars worth which he lent to his enterprising son.

Well, Wyx appeared at school next morning, his pockets just bulging with nickels. He had no less than two hundred and seventy-five of them for sale at a dime apiece. Before he had disposed of a dozen, however, Jordan came on the play-ground, and, showing a handful of the coveted coins, immediately offered them at nine cents.

The nickel market up to this time had been a one-sided affair; but now it was divided between the "bulls" and the "bears."

You know it is the habit of a bull to toss everything into the air which he attacks—to raise it; while, on the other hand, a bear pulls things down and gets under foot whatever he wishes to obtain or destroy. From this has arisen the habit among dealers in money, and what are called "securities" (documents supposed to secure a certain amount of wealth to their possessors), of calling a man who would like to have the price of an article increase, in order that he may sell to better advantage, a "bull"; and of calling him a "bear" who tries to lower prices, in order that he may buy more cheaply.

Now, Wyx, of course, was a "bull" on the nickels in this school market, for naturally he wanted to keep the price as high as possible. Jordan, on the contrary, was a "bear," pulling the price down with all his might to favor a scheme of his own, as we shall see. Thus he offered his coins at nine cents, and Wyx found his corner "busted."

"I can't stand this," he exclaimed, in dismay, "I'll sell at eight."

"Seven!" shouted Jordan, dropping his price another notch as quick as a flash.

"Six!" cried the bull.

Wyx was out of all patience, that a fellow should turn up in this way to ruin his business. To be really like the great railway and telegraph managers, what the rival speculators should have done at this point was to go off into a corner and agree between themselves that both would stick to the ten-cent price. Then, if not enough buyers appeared to take all the nickels held by both, they would, at the end of the sale, divide what they had made.

This would be a "combination," and "pooling the profits." But they didn't do it.

Jordan thought he knew a trick worth two of that, and showed himself a true financier.

When we left them, you will remember, in order to undersell the pestiferous Jordan, Wyx had offered his coins at six cents each. Quick as a wink Jordan spun round and shouted: "I'll take all you've got!"

Imagine the astonishment and disgust of the outwitted Wyx, who as city men would say, had been caught out in a shower without an umbrella!

But there was no way out of it. He had made a public offer and it had been taken up. He had to stand by it and sell out, however much he disliked the bargain.

By borrowing and scraping Jordan got together the $16.50 needed to pay for his 275 nickels, which he then proceeded to sell in small lots at ten cents, clearing four cents on each one by his quick wit, while the first speculator got little or no profit out of his supposed "corner."

The boys bought, but it was with wry faces, for they remembered they had not been sharp enough to save Wyx's offer of six before Jordan captured the whole lot. They only represented the [illegible] who speculate in Wall street, and whom the [illegible]

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

EVERYBODY opinion on the Greely expedition sympathizes with the American idea that no more Arctic expeditions should be sent out, but hints that it will not prevent other Arctic expeditions any more than the latest accident on the Mont Blanc will prevent Alpine ascents.

AN artificial flower maker rejoices in the extravagance of the time. Bouquets of artificial flowers are carried by many ladies at balls. A wreath of artificial flowers is a pretty trimming for a dress. One made for a lady at Saratoga was of pinks and drooping grass, and cost $90.

A CHINESE physician in this country says that a very small proportion of Chinamen die of consumption, because, three hundred years ago, T'sang Loo, a learned doctor, discovered that people become afflicted with the disease by breathing through the mouth instead of the nose.

MR. THOMAS CONROY is a hardworking shoemaker in Tanner's Falls, Pa., who, in fulfillment of a vow, for twenty-six years has refused to touch a fortune of £5,000 and accumulated interest awaiting him in Dublin, Ireland, until his relatives should apologise for having erroneously accused him of sympathy with the Molly Maguire organization.

FROM a paper contributed by the veteran scholar, Dr. Edkins, to a recent number of the Chinese Recorder, it appears that about B. C. 2200 the Chinese possessed a knowledge of the art of writing, a year of 366 days with an intercalary month, the astrolabe, the zodiac, the cycle of sixty, of twelve musical reeds forming a gamut, which also constituted the basis of a denary metrology for measures of length, weight, and capacity, divination, and a feudal system.

IT is said that the following anecdote, which has been told of a number of people, originated with Lord Cowley, who at one of his own parties in Paris, was leaning against the mantlepiece when an unknown gentleman said to him, "Do you mean to say that Lord Cowley's parties are never livelier than this?" "Never." "Well," said the stranger, "then I shall take myself off at once." "You're a lucky man," said Lord Cowley, with a sigh; "I'm obliged to stop."

THE manufacture of "buffalo-horn" furniture has become an industry in New York City. The horns are not those of the bison, as is commonly believed, but are from the cattle killed in the abattoirs. They are sold at the slaughter houses for a little more than what the button manufacturers give, are cleaned, dried, scraped and polished. The cost of making these horn goods is less than that of carved wood, but they bring two or three times more than the latter. The new industry is almost monopolized by Germans from Saxony.

ON the 21st of July, 1809, died Daniel Lambert, at the early age of 39. What his actual weight was at the time of his death is not exactly known; but three years before that melancholy event when he exhibited himself at his house, 53 Piccadilly, he weighed, according to one of his exhibition bills, 1,232 pounds, London weight. The coffin enclosing his remains, which was with some difficulty deposited in St. Mark's Churchyard, contained no less than 112 superficial feet of elm, was 6 feet 4 inches long, 4 feet 4 inches wide, and 2 feet 4 inches deep.

Her Embarrassing Mistake.

As a lady opened the door of a Second street residence to a ring Monday, a neatly dressed individual bowed politely and inserted one foot in the doorway far enough to guarantee that proceedings would not be brought to too summary a close. The lady concluded he was an agent and remarked in vigorous tones: "I don't want anything!" at the same time giving undeniable indications that she desired to shut the door.

"I beg your pardon, madam, I am not offering you anything," said he with an injured and dignified air.

"Pray excuse me," she answered, "my mistake arose from the fact that I have been greatly annoyed by agents. Whom did you wish to see?"

Without noticing her inquiry he said: "Madam, it is difficult to reconcile your reception of me with what a gentleman would naturally expect at the hands of a lady. Such brusqueness is chilling to refined and sensitive natures accustomed to the usages of polite society."

Again apologizing, she was about to ask him in, when he drew from his coat pocket a little box and opening it, explained: "Madam, I have for sale here an invaluable ——"

The rest of extracting his foot from that doorway before the door slammed with a noise that could be heard even blocks as downcast his assertion that he left the carriage unopened.

The Manufacture of Leather.

The skins are first cleansed from hair and cuticle by being soaked for several days in a pit of lime water; this loosens the hair and cuticle so that it is easily scraped off with a curved knife, upon a half cylinder of wood called a beam. The hair thus removed is sold to plasterers who use it in their mortar. The skins are now steeped for a few days in a sour liquor of fermented rye or barley, or in weak sulphuric acid. By this process, called "the raising," the pores are distended and rendered more susceptible of the action of the tan. The skins are then put into the tan pit in alternate layers, with crushed oak bark, volania, catechu, divi divi and other vegetable astringents, and the pit is filled with water. As the tannin is taken up by the skins it becomes necessary to enter the tan-pit and add fresh supplies of tanning material and water. The time required to tan the skins or transform them to leather depends on their thickness and other circumstances, and varies from four months to two years. When fully tanned the leather, if cut through, is of a uniform brown color; anything like a white streak in the centre showing incompleteness in the process.

It is now stretched upon a convex piece of wood called a "horse," beaten and smoothed, or passed between cylinders to make it more solid and supple, and, lastly, dried by suspension in an airy, covered building. Tanned leather often undergoes the further operation of currying, or impregnation with oil. Leather, prepared as already described, when it is received by the currier is by him rendered smooth, shining and pliable, so as to make it suitable for the purposes of the shoemaker, coachmaker, saddler and harness-maker. First it is soaked in water to render it pliable, then stretched upon the beam and shaved smooth with a knife, next rubbed with a polishing stone, and while still wet besmeared with a mixture of fish oil and tallow, and hung up in a loft to dry. As it dries the water only evaporates, the oil penetrating the pores of the leather. The grain or hair side is then blackened with copperas water, or sulphate of iron in solution, the iron uniting with the gallic acid of the tan and producing an inky dye or a gallate of iron. Leather so prepared is chiefly used for the uppers of ladies' shoes. Leather for the uppers of men's boots and shoes is blackened on the flesh side, or waxed, as it is termed, with lampblack and oil, which is rubbed in with a hard brush. The thick leather for the soles of boots and shoes is simply tanned without being curried.—Ouseley's Technical Educator.

Honor Among Gamblers.

A recent writer, who is himself a gambler, is not inclined to believe the statement that professional gamblers have a high standard of honor among themselves. He says they are a very suspicious body of men whose bond takes the form of collateral security. The two chief component parts, he says, that go to make up the professional gambler are cupidity and laziness. These two characteristics predominating result in the complete demoralization of the man. He sums up the whole matter in this way: "A business that is illegitimate in itself and draws to its support criminals from every walk in crime must on its face be demoralizing. I do not attempt to say that every gambling room is the constant and only resort of criminals, but I do wish to be understood as saying that there is not a game in this or any other city that would exclude a man on social or moral grounds. Cash, no matter how obtained, is the 'open sesame' in every instance. The conclusions arrived at in this article have their foundation in solid fact, and the deductions and suggestions are the outcome of mature thought, by one who has made the subject a study, from the vantage ground of the dealer's chair."—Atlanta Constitution.

Stone Cutting.

As an illustration of possible improvement and discovery, the working of stone may be instanced. This is one of the earliest forms of industry. The first tools were made of stone, and it is among the earliest materials which men began to work upon. Yet the methods and tools are substantially the same as they were 4000 years ago, when the monoliths of Egypt were hewn from the vast granite, when the vast blocks of the pyramids were quarried, and the mighty ruins of vast antiquity were new. There have been certain improvements in machinery, such as channeling machines, steam drills, etc., but these are only the handles of the tools; the bulk of the granite working is still done with mallet and chisel, as it was thousands of years ago. The time will come when some fortunate inventor will discover methods and tools by which granite shall be wrought with as much facility as iron.

ARCTIC EXPLORATION.

A Few of the Expeditions that Have Attempted to Find an Open Polar Sea.

It is but eight years less than three centuries since the first Arctic expedition reached the region of polar ice and spent a dreary winter locked in by the icebergs and shut up in their huts by wolves, snow storms and white bears. Two lives were sacrificed in this expedition, which reached a latitude of 80 degrees and 11 minutes.

Three hundred years have passed and the latest, the Greely expedition, touched 83 degrees 24 minutes, the highest latitude reached since the Dutch navigators spent ten months in the ice off the island of Nova Zembla. In all these three centuries only three degrees of the journey to the pole have been overcome—a distance something less than the distance between New York and Boston, a little more than between New York and Albany.

This fact alone is a significant comment upon the value of these expeditions which have cost a prince's revenue and as many lives as have been lost in some noted battles.

The Dutch were the great navigators of the sixteenth century, and soon after achieving their nation's independence began to speculate upon a passage to China and India by way of the North Pole. Their ideas of that region were fanciful indeed. Some believed that those seas inclosed a polar continent of perpetual summer and unbroken daylight, whose inhabitants had attained perfection in virtue and intelligence. Others thought it peopled with monsters having horses' hoofs, dogs' heads and ears so long that they coiled them around their bodies in lieu of clothing. Other tribes were headless with eyes in their breasts, living in incessant fogs and tempests during the summer, but dying every winter and, like plants, revived to life by the advent of a brief spring. It was believed that the voyagers would have to encounter mountains of ice and volcanoes of fire, together with monsters on land and sea more ferocious than the eye of man ever saw.

But in spite of these terrors, on the 5th of June, 1594, the first expedition to navigate these frozen seas set out from Amsterdam. Their ships and appliances were of the rudest description. In place of the stanch modern steamboats built for the purpose they sailed in small, unwieldy vessels built like a tower at stern and stem, scooped in the middle and scarcely able to plow their way through the water, to say nothing of the ice. Instead of the delicate and ingenious scientific instruments constituting an exploring outfit of the present day they had a clumsy astronomical ring three feet in circumference on which they depended for ascertaining the latitude. They had no food, no rifles, no compact ammunition, no heavy clothing of fur, no rubber garments, no logarithm, log or nautical almanacs, no tea, coffee, or the hundreds of luxuries, stimulants, medicines, and other stores which now abound in such profusion.

The first expedition was turned back by the ice and polar bears, but the problem of a northeast passage to China was considered solved, and the next year a second ship was sent with a cargo of broadcloth, lines and tapestries for the Chinese market which the explorers were expected to reach. Again the ice and the bears frightened them back.

But an offer of 25,000 florins to the discoverer of a northeast passage to the east led to a third expedition, the first that outlived a polar winter amidst perils and sufferings, whose story reads as much like the narratives of Kane and DeLong, of Hayes and Greely, as the stories of shipwreck and rescue in the days of Robinson Crusoe read like those of the days of Enoch Arden.

Showers on Tap.

It is generally believed that the discharge of artillery tends to dispel clouds and mists in the immediate neighborhood. A French electrician combats this theory, and maintains that the effect of a series of sufficiently violent detonations would be to compel the clouds to discharge their moisture. He even goes so far as to say that it would be perfectly possible to produce a fall of rain in this way. He suggests a method by which he believes this often highly-desirable result might be brought about. His plan is to send up one or more balloons freighted with panclastite or some other equally explosive compound. They are to be connected with a battery on the ground by means of a fine wire, and when they attain the necessary altitude—that is, when they enter the cloud-zone—the spark is to be transmitted. The detonation will follow, and a refreshing shower will be the result. Farmers and others who suffer heavily from the effects of a prolonged drought will probably be anxious that the French savant's system should be given a trial, no method hitherto devised for obtaining rain having proved quite efficacious.—*N. Building and Pavements in Mexico.

While there are no 13-story, or even five-story, buildings in Mexico, writes a correspondent, stone structures two, three and even four stories high prevail in the central business quarters. Most Americans coming here will be surprised, I fancy, to find that there are streets as handsome, as substantially built and as full of wealth as the average thoroughfares of commerce in large cities at home. Mexico is no mushroom growth. Its universal stone is handsome and its air of solidity is extremely pleasing. Humboldt's admiration for the breadth of Mexican streets, however, seems odd. Compared with American urban thoroughfares, save those of the older parts of Boston, they are very narrow. A railway track and two carriages will fill the space from curb to curb in more streets than one. The sidewalks are ludicrously narrow. It is sometimes impossible for two persons to walk abreast, and four arm-in-arm would monopolize the breadth of most of them. But the pavement of the driveways is generally clean, and no one hesitates to go in the road if there is no room on the walk.

The central streets are paved with stone blocks, not quite cobble stones, nor yet of comfortable size. They are ill-laid, and it is rough riding on them. Indians water the streets by hand, as well as sweep them with little whisk-brooms, the brush tied in the middle without a handle, so that both sides are available. It is a wonder that street sweepers survive a hour of their back-aching work. The Indian endurance is deservedly famous. It is a comical sight, this sweeping and sprinkling by hand, with a basin full of water at a time. On the broader drives one will see half a dozen stout fellows laboring at an old-fashioned hand fire-engine pumping water through a hose upon the thoroughfare. There are modern water-carts in town, but, judging from the appearance of things to-day, they will not be universally employed for an age.

A Sensational Case.

M. Claretie, in the Paris Temps, mentions a rather sensational case of recovery from cholera during one of the earlier visits of the epidemic, due to the skill of Dr. Lorain, a well known physician of the time. The patient had sunk into the last stage of collapse, and the hospital physicians had stopped the treatment as useless. Dr. Lorain, happening to enter the ward, determined after a hasty examination of the sufferer to try an experiment with the object of restoring the circulation, which had practically ceased. He first performed the operation he contemplated on a rabbit, into whose crural vein he injected a certain quantity of warm water. He then repeated it on the dying man, into whose circulatory system he pumped 400 grammes—nearly a pint—of the same fluid. The heart began to beat at once, though so faintly as to be hardly perceptible. The operation was repeated with still happier effects. The pulse could now be felt at the wrist; the patient recovered his sensibility and his voice. In ten days he left the hospital perfectly well.

Land Frauds in Dakota.

Special Agent James informs the Commissioner of the General Land Office, under date of Huron, D. T., July 30, that he made complaint before the United States Court against one J. B. Weeks, attorney and land agent at Huron, on a charge of perjury in the presentation of a duplicate soldier's declaratory statement No. 1,868, Huron series of Patrick Kinsley. The original statement of Kinsley was presented at the Huron office on March 27, 1883, and was numbered 799, Huron series. The inspector states that upon the arrest of Weeks he made an examination of the papers in his office and found blank relinquishments to the number of about sixty, executed by the parties in whose names soldiers' declaratory statements had been filled in the Huron office for five weeks past. From the office were also obtained original agreements and memoranda showing the formation of a partnership with which Weeks was connected for the purpose of dealing in soldiers' declaratory statements. Further investigation outside disclosed the fact that Weeks had sold the preference right to parties other than soldiers to make entry of those tracts for a valuable consideration.

THE HUMOROUS PAPERS.

WHAT WE FIND IN THEM TO SMILE OVER THIS WEEK.

HE HAD BEEN TO SCHOOL.

"Where have you been, you young rascal?" angrily demanded Fitzgerker, as Pinder came sneaking in at the back door, late in the afternoon.

"Been to school," slowly answered Pinder, dropping his books and anxiously eyeing the strap his father dangled so tantalisingly.

"Been to school? Oh, you little liar, do you think I'm to be fooled that easy? I went over to the academy and you hadn't been there to-day; one of the boys said you had gone fishing. Now, what have you to say to that?"

Gradually edging toward the door and keeping a chair between him and his father, Pinder raised his soulful eyes and innocently asked:

"Well, pa, don't fishes have schools?"—Atlanta Constitution.

A COMPLETE DISGUISE.

Jones, before starting for the country for a Sunday's shooting, wrapped his new gun up into the smallest possible compass.

"I wouldn't have anyone know I had a gun with me for anything," he remarked.

"Why, my dear?" asked Mrs. Jones.

"The person has moved over on this street and you know I haven't been to church for six weeks."

"Well, he would never guess you have a gun. It looks more like a fishing rod."—Graphic.

EXPECTING TOO MUCH.

Little Billy Simpton is aged about 10. Not long since the Simpton family was increased by still another little boy, and a friend of the family, meeting Billy, said to him:

"So you have got another baby at your house. He is a right smart little fellow, ain't he?"

"Humph!" sneered Billy, turning up his nose: "how many smart boys do you expect us to have in our family?"—Texas Siftings.

"But what of that?"

RATHER SEVERE ON A RASH HEAD WAITER.

One of the muffers of the Cincinnati Club was attracting great attention in the hotel dining-room by ordering around the servants. Just as the head waiter walked up he suddenly rapped on his glass with a vigor and a four-tined fork.

"Waiter," he cried, "there is a fly in my cabbage."

"That's all right," said the head waiter, "don't mind it. There is no danger of your catching it."

The remainder of the meal was finished in silence.

"I told her that she was to let you and Willie pour sand down her back?"

"Not exactly that, mamma, but you told her she was to mind the children."

CHILTON VIEW.

Published Every Thursday Morning.

CLANTON, ALA., OCT. 2, 1884.

Mr. Beecher has written another letter in favor of Grover Cleveland which should help the latter. A young man takes the pastor of Plymouth Church to task for supporting the Governor. Mr. Beecher's reply closes with the significant sentence: "My message to every young man is, beware of his (Cleveland's) mistake of years ago, and imitate his virtues of to-day."

Mrs. Belva Lockwood sorrowfully admits to a Washington interviewer that she is "over thirty-five." This bit of news, wrung from her by the press, is made public because of the constitutional requirement that the President shall be thirty-five years old. Mrs. Lockwood will live in history as the first woman who ever admitted that she was thirty-five years old before she became a grandmother.

Mr. Daniel Manning, Chairman of the New York Democratic State Committee, said to a gentleman last week after a meeting of the committee: "This is the first time I have spoken with regard to the campaign. People may say what they please, but Grover Cleveland is going to be our next President. Perhaps I ought not to say so much, but I have the most reliable information from all over the country which assures me of what I say."

Schurz is drawing phenomenal crowds in the West, a fact which is seriously disturbing the Republicans, who attempt to answer his unanswerable arguments by charging that he is paid so much a speech. It would doubtless seem a heinous crime in the eyes of the Republicans, who are in the habit of buying whole States, for the Democracy to defray the expenses of a campaign speaker. The truth is, however, that Schurz, while not a rich man, accepts nothing for his work in behalf of Cleveland, even paying his own expenses.

A marriage in Paris between Mlle. Deslandes and Vicomte Fleury is compared to the reconciliation of the Capults and Montagues. The bridegroom is the son of Napoleon III.'s confidential adviser, Gen. Fleury, while the bride is granddaughter of Catalani, the celebrated singer, who was noted for her intense hatred of Napoleon. When she visited Paris in 1806 the Emperor held out the most tempting inducements to her for an engagement at the opera. A wish from such a quarter was of course a command, and Catalani, fearing the consequences of a refusal, slipped out of the capital secretly at night and made her way to England.

Dr. Hunter McGuire, medical director on Stonewall Jackson's staff, says the General had, as if by miracle, escaped wounds until at Chancellorsville, when it seemed his guardian angel deserted him, for he was struck by three bullets in quick succession. The first went through the right hand, lodging under the skin. The next entered the left forearm just below the elbow and came out near the wrist, completely shattering both bones. This was followed by an ounce ball crashing through the left arm near the shoulder, severing an important artery. To add to the catastrophe his horse took fright and dashed madly through the timber before he could get the reins gathered up in his left hand.

The young bachelor editor of the Montgomery Advertiser appears to be distressed over the Mother Hubbard dress, which, evidently, his girl is now wearing. He is afraid that he is going to be deceived, and complains: "When a man sees his girl in a Mother Hubbard he never knows how much is girl and how much is vacuum. A portly looking girl may be of the Sarah Bernhardt pattern when she comes down to solid facts, and although it is generally believed and taught that men like to be humbugged there are some things too intimately connected with his terrestrial comfort and happiness to allow or admit any uncertainty. Most of us like to get all we bargain for." To help a brother in distress we will suggest that our Advertiser friend should look at his girl's feet and after taking in the ankle or rotundity of that appendage he may be better able to [illegible]

A Charitable View.

The Haynesville Examiner gives as its excuse for supporting Grover Cleveland for President the statement that ninety nine out of every hundred men in the country are guilty of adultery. The Examiner is nearer right than wrong. Though Cleveland might have deserved death at the hands of the relatives of the woman he seduced, yet as they neglected to put him out of the way, and as the public generally have no great grievance against him, there is no reason why he should not receive the support of the people.

This is a common sense view of both the Mormon question and the Cleveland intrigue.

If the community in which Cleveland lived felt aggrieved at the crime it was a duty and a right to enforce the law and punish him. The Examiner thinks with the Right Rev. Dr. Huntington that Cleveland was sowing "wild oats" when living with Mrs. Halpin, and with the Rev. Dr. it thinks he has reformed.

Here is what Dr. Huntington says:

"Believing, as I do, that this is a thing of the past and no part of his present character, I shall certainly vote for him. Until I came into this state I never heard aught about this scandal. He does not look with complacency on the past, and is not living as a dissolute man."

Our contemporary commends the Dr's. view to those presses having no other excuse for supporting the Democratic nominee. As we are all guilty, according to the Examiner, it is quite likely that Cleveland will receive the suport of that very practical journal reform or no reform.

Col. Sadler's Address.

Hon. Thos. W. Sadler, our able nominee for Congress delivered an interesting address at the court house on Tuesday morning.

He began by saying that he was not in favor of long speeches and did not propose to make a long talk on this occasion. He said that in our country every citizen should feel an intrest as well as the candidate. Everything that we have and are is dependent upon the judicious administration of the government, and all the blessings that we enjoy depend upon the nature and character of the government under which we live. We do not think of this enough and we do not show proper diligence in securing a good government. Every man in our country is a sovereign. We have no crowned heads but those of the people; and it behooves every citizen to exercise due diligence that we may never have any other. We must not let lethargy creep upon us from overconfidence. We may be over confident, and he desired to impress upon the people the fact that every man should do his full duty toward the government which throws security around his property and his family. There is no excuse for neglecting this duty.

He said there were only two political parties and spoke of their principles, practices and tendencies. The people of the south are compelled to be democrats for self-protection. The few white members of the Republican party are every one looking for Federal aid and Federal patronage, and that is all that keeps them in the Republican party. In the administration of the government $260,000,000 was annually distributed, and this huge sum was the attraction to these Radical office seekers.

Looking at the condition of Alabama in the dark days of reconstruction, we had only to compare that period with the present honest and economical administration of the government, to be made aware of the benefits of good government. The sad experiences through which we have passed, have caused the true white people of the South to be united as one man to turn out the vile horde that was forced upon us by bayonets.

In touching upon the history of the Republican party, Col. S. said that that party was conceived in the declaration of Wm. H. Seward, in the halls of congress, that "there was a law that was higher than the constitution." That was the beginning of the abolition party. Later Thad. Stevens had boldly declared when reproached for one of his partisan speeches, that "the Republican party was working outside of the constitution." What is to become of the government if we keep a party in power that openly and avowedly ignores the constitution

No Republican is interested in the State governments—the tendency of the Republican party being to wipe out State governments and establish a centralized and iron-handed power at Washington.

Mr. Sadler's further remarks showed him to be in favor the Morrison twenty per cent. reduction tariff bill. He cosidered the present tariff a strong and growing menace to constitutional government in this country. Hence, he favored a low tariff and the abolition of the internal revenue tax.

In concluding, he promised sacredly to dedicate all the ability of which he is posessed to his constituency, should he be elected.

Col. Sadler spoke less than an hour, and in that time the fact was impressed upon his hearers that he was the right man in the right place as our nominee for Congress. His thoughts are presented calmly and forcibly. As our next representative in Congress, he will doubtless be a capable and ready worker.

FORM OF THE TICKET.

Special attention is called to the following letter from Hon. N. H. R. Dawson, Chairman of the Democratic Executive Committee, addressed to the editor of The Advertiser. Col. Dawson's letter is very timely, and the newspapers of the State will do well to follow his suggestion, and publish it for the information of all. The form of the ticket is of great importance:

Montgomery, Sept. 24.—As there is some misapprehension in the State in regard to the form of the ticket, or ballot to be used at the election for Presidential electors and members of Congress on the 4th of November, I hand you a form of the Democratic ticket that conforms to the law. You will see that the number of the district in the case of electors is not printed on the ticket, as it is not necessary. The electors are elected by general ticket. No other words or figures should appear on the ticket than occur in the following form:

For Electors for President and Vice President of the United States.

William H. Barnes,
Frank W. Bowdon,
Sydney T. Prince,
Lewelly A. Shaver,
Jesse M. Carmichael,
Gaston A. Robbins,
Felix L. Smith,
John J Altman,
William H. Denson,
Robt. A. McClellan.

For Representative in the 49th Congress.

We would be glad to have you publish this in your paper and ask Democratic State papers to copy.

Yours truly,

Chairman.

The Dry Spell of 1839.

Hayneville Examiner.

A citizen of Hayneville furnishes the following:

The present dry Fall reminds me of the long dry spell of weather in the fall of 1839. Sometime during the year—I think it was in the month of September—I walked "dry shod" across the Black Warrior river, from bank to bank, opposite the University near Tuskaloosa. The bed of the river looked like a broad street paved with solid rock. Water was running in the crevices of the rocks, some of them ten or twelve feet deep, and in many places not more than two feet wide. In many places large circular basins—like massive bowls or wash pots—had been cut in the rocks by the revolving motion of the water; whirling small rocks until these rocks had become round and looked like cannon balls of different sizes. The skeletons of fish were lying in every direction, many from two to three feet in length. The buzzards had been well supplied with brain food.

My recollection is that steamboats from Mobile did not reach Montgomery until about Christmas Anno Domini 1839.

Mrs. Smith says there are 600 women holding official position in the Government under discreditable circumstances. Mrs. Smith appears to be preparing campaign material for the Mormons, as well as scaring our Congressmen to death.

Our friend DuBose, editor of the Columbiana Chronicle, says of the Chilton View office that "it is the neatest and most attractive printing office he has ever seen."

We regret to chronicle the death of Mr. Robert I. Hill, which occured at his residence near Strasburg on the 18th of Sept. He was about 33 years of age. He leaves a wife and a family of seven children to mourn his sudden demise. He died of congestion of the brain.

The Tuskegee News announces, by authority of Mr. W. C. Brewer, that he will not be the candidate of the Independents and Republicans for Representative in Congress from the Fifth District. Protracted Meeting.

Last Sunday closed a protracted meeting at the Clanton Baptist Church. The meeting resulted in eight accessions to the church, and on Sunday morning seven of the applicants were baptized. To the untiring zeal and perseverance of Rev. R. W. Hamrick is due much of this good work. Mr. Hamrick was assisted by the pastor of the church and by Revs. A. E. Burns and J. M. McCord. In this meeting seed were sown that will prove fruitful of good in our community for all time to come.

Meeting of the Executive Committee.

At the called meeting of the county Democratic Executive Committee held at Clanton on Monday last, a canvass of the county was planned for the congressional campaign. Mr. Gentry tendered his resignation which was accepted upon a motion. Mr. S. A. Curry was elected a member of the committee to represent Providence precinct to fill the vacancy caused by Mr. G's. resignation.

On last evening on the mail train going south on the E. T. V. & G. railroad, the train was late thirty minutes at Calera. One mile north of Montevallo it came in contact with several cows, which resulted in throwing the engine and the entire train from the track. Engineer Little and a colored fireman were somewhat injured, but not fatally. Mr. George Powell with wife and baby were on the train, but were not injured. Mr. Thos. Evans, assistant road master, was soon at the scene of the accident, and got the second class car on the track and carried the passengers to Montevallo. Mr. McColly then carried the train to Selma. Providence was in our favor. G. W. P.

Why Is It?

The Oxford News wants to know why it is that so-called newspaper men, hailing from some remote corner of the earth, can come into its neighborhood and talk the business men and others out of more money in 3 days than it could get from them in 20 years of honest, faithful newspaper work in their midst. We agree with the News that the success of these gentry does not furnish a pleasant subject for the contemplation of the honest, hard working editor.

It seems that it may be necessary to call a special term of the circuit court this Fall, to dispose of the important cases now on the docket. There is a great deal more business than can be attended to in one week, and the next Legislature will be asked to consider the matter of extending our court to a two weeks term.

The Frazer Case.

The Frazer damage suit against the L. & N. railroad company, occupied all of Monday and the greater part of Tuesday in our circuit court. The case was decided in favor of the railroad company. The Frazer family were suing for $25,000 damages, the complaint being that a freight train on the S. & N. Ala. Div. of the L. & N. R. R. ran over and killed Mr. Richard Frazer about two years since near Jemison. The case resulted in a mistrial at the last term of court. The defence was represented by Cols. Thos. G. Jones and J. M. Falkner, the complainants by Col. H. C. Tompkins.

ANOTHER CHAPTER IN THE AWFUL STORY OF ARCTIC SUFFERING.

The Secrets of the Camp on Smith's Sound.—Proof Positive that Dr. Pavy was Killed—Discovery and Despair of the Men Left Without Food in the Arctic Regions.

[From the New York Times.]

Until the death of Surgeon Pavy, of the Greely party, which occurred at the rapidly depopulated camp on June 6th, three weeks before rescue came, the flesh cut from most of the dead bodies for use by the survivors as food and bait was removed by a hand skilled in dissection. A few of the bodies had the fleshy portions cut away entire. But with the majority the work had been so well done that a casual observer would not have suspected without other evidence, of which there was plenty, however, that the survivors had been reduced to cannibalism, and had for a long time been subsisting principally on the bodies of their dead comrades. It is not a coincidence that the body of Dr. Pavy, with those of two others who died after him, should be reported as washed away. With the Surgeon gone the scalpel could not be used. Before, the bodies had been left with little mark of the terrible work done. After his death the survivors were forced to remember the bodies and denude them of flesh in a way that left nothing but bones. So these unfortunates were reported as buried in an ice floe and washed away, and to the list was added Corp. Salor, who died on June 3, and Sergt. Rice, who died on April 9.

On most of the bodies an incision was made from the clavicle downward below the ribs. The scalpel was then passed along under the skin, and the flap was carefully laid back on either side. The flesh was then removed from the ribs, the skin was pulled back in place, and the edges were carefully joined so that there was no external evidence left of the ghastly work but a dark line. The thighs were treated in the same manner, the skin being replaced about the fleshless bones. The legs were stripped to the ankle joints and the arms to the wrists. The hands, feet, and face were not mutilated. This was a work requiring skill, and must have been a long and careful operation. No one in the party except the Surgeon could so skillfully remove the flesh from a human body and leave the skin intact. How Dr. Pavy met his death has not been explained, but it was probably by the knife. With him gone, and every day the pangs of hunger growing more unbearable, the caution was relaxed, and the survivors ate of human flesh however they could easiest secure it.

In the last days before relief came to the wretched men it was the doctrine of the survival of the strongest that ruled. All sense of honor and feeling had been lost. It was Sergt. Long who first saw the steam launch, and slid down the snow and ice from the distress signal to greet the rescuing party. His face and beard were covered with blood from a duck which he had recently shot and had been eating raw. It is stated that he stopped to conceal half the body of the bird before sliding down the snow. He was the strongest of the party, and, despite the frightful gale, was able to walk to the launch. Sergt. Fredericks also had considerable strength left, and clambered on board the Thetis almost unaided.

After so many months in the desolate Arctic regions, after so much suffering, and passing through such scenes of horror, it was seldom that the men stood upright. They crawled about on their hands and knees over the rocks and ice, and when Sergt. Brainard was undressed on board the Thetis his knees were found callousad to a thickness of over half an inch. In the midst of such horrors it was wondered by the rescuing party how Greely and his few companions kept their reason. About the camp were scattered bones of the dead, and dissected and mutilated bodies were half exposed in the little burial plot back of the tent. It was a scene at which the veterans shuddered as they looked, and the truth stood revealed.

The bodies of those who died natural deaths were not mutilated where death had been caused by disease. As to how many died of scurvy accounts differ. Commander Schley reported 17 as having died from starvation. Sergt. Cross, the first of the exploring party to die, passed away last New Year's Day, according to Commander Schley's report. He did not die of starvation, but from the use of liquor. He would drink anything that had a suspicion of alcohol about it, even paint. This love for liquor was so strong among some of the sailors of the relief party that the carpenter, using a little alcohol with which to mix shellac, was obliged to guard it as a miser hides away his money.

Sergt. Connell, one of the rescued, says that Cross died of scurvy on Jan. 18. At St. John's it was reported that one of the two men lost on April 9 died of scurvy. With several dead of scurvy said Henry shot all did not die of starvation. Instead, it is feared that others met death as Henry did. It is known that court-martials were of frequent occurrence in the Greely camp. Dr. Pavy was on trial no less than three times. There were dissensions among the men, and as their condition grew more desperate these increased. Until weakened in body and mind by privation each did all he could for the others. But at the last the struggle for life became single. It was each man for himself.

The officers of the relief vessels still refuse to say anything on the unpleasant subject, as to their duty. Seiken talk freely. But some of the scenes [illegible] are too revolting for supposition. At the Greely camp matters were in so bad a condition as it is possible [illegible] the commencement of the [illegible] Lieut. Greely has shown what [illegible] one of the three men [illegible]

Where only scattered bones were left no attempt was made to put them together except in the easiest marked Private Henry.

How They Marry in France.

In my position, says an English correspondent in France, I was obliged to be everybody's friend, and, when a certain young Frenchman asked me to be his ambassador in a matrimonial negotiation, I willingly gave my consent. He had a small independent property and a profession; he had also taken better university degrees than most Frenchmen think it necessary to take, and was, on the whole, a superior person—very eligible as a son-in-law.

The young lady whom he wanted to marry belonged to a very respectable family, was well educated, owned some property, and was one of the most beautiful women I ever saw in my life. I complimented the young gentleman on his good taste, telling him that the lady grew prettier every day; to which he answered:

"Is she pretty? I have never seen her. Some people say she is pretty."

My feelings, as an Englishman believing in love and an artist believing in beauty, were outraged by this answer, so I rejoined, with some ascerbity:

"Then, for what reason on earth do you want to marry her?"

It was now his turn to be surprised. After opening his eyes in astonishment, he said:

"I have reached the time of life when men take wives. I have made careful inquiries, and, from all I can learn, this young lady would make me a good and suitable wife. They say that she is well brought up, and can manage a house, and that she has good manners. I know that she has a suitable property, which is essential. There would be a fair proportion between her estate and mine, and my professional income would place a considerable balance on my side."

My sense of the fitness of things rebelled at this piece of logic. Yet it was absurd to expect this young gentleman to reason otherwise than after the manner of a respectable Frenchman. His motives were honest enough. He was not in the least a fortune-hunter, telling lies to get possession of an estate; he was simply a decent young Frenchman, telling the exact truth about himself and his motives. He had got the idea into his head on his last birthday—he being then thirty-two years of age—that it was time to get married, and this was the manner, at once frank and prudent, in which he thought it best to set about it. I saw the mother of the young lady, and found her prepared to listen to my young friend's suit—that is if he should wait for two years. My client, however, was dissatisfied with this decision, and, without taking further steps in the matter, applied for another lady and was married within the month. Strange as it may seem the marriage was a happy one.

Moravian Funeral Ceremonies.

Writing of Moravian customs, a correspondent in a letter from Bethlehem, Pa., says: "By accident, as we left the Sisters' house, a funeral was just being conducted at the church, a building perhaps sixty years old, with small windows and an open tower, but in interior modern and commonplace, like any New England parish meeting house. While the friends and a promiscuous assembly had entered the church, the coffin had been carried to a small building adjoining, called the dead-house, to remain during the service. In olden times, almost as soon as the breath ceased, the dead were borne to this house, there to rest till the burial, but at present it is only used during funeral ceremonies. When the service closed, those who wished to look upon the face of the dead repaired to this house, while the friends remained in the church till, at a signal from the trombone players, who, six in number, led the procession, the coffin was brought out, carried some distance and rested on the ground at one angle of the square formed by the church, the dead-house the rear wall of the Sisters' house, and a parochial school house. The trombone players, with the officiating minister, took their places on one side, the nearest friends on the other; others followed so as to fill up two sides of the square, the trombones sounded again, and the minister repeated these lines, which were sung slowly and plaintively:

Grant me with faith unshaken
To rest upon Thy grace,
Until my soul is taken
To see Thee face to face.

And then, without a word, the procession moved away."

Some Figures on Wheat.

A prominent exchange advocated the wisdom of absorbing our own products instead of looking for foreign markets. A correspondent replies: Let us look at the following figures:

	Bushels.
Our wheat crop this year is estimated at	550,000,000
Add reserve of old wheat on hand	40,000,000
Total supplies	590,000,000
Our wants are:
325,000,000 bushels for bread, etc.
40,000,000 bushels for seeding
80,000,000 bushels for reserve	445,000,000
Surplus	215,000,000

We must get rid of that surplus; let us see where:

The importing wants of Europe are		220,000,000
Of which Russia will supply (bushels)	80,000,000
India will supply (bushels)	40,000,000
Other countries will supply (bushels)	30,000,000	150,000,000
Total wants		95,000,000

Thus we shall have $15,000,000 bushels of wheat on hand to supply probable wants of 90,000,000! No wonder the European demand is slack, the markets lifeless, and lower prices predicted everywhere.

WAGES AND LIVING.

Report of the Massachusetts Labor Bureau—Comparison Between Massachusetts and Great Britain.

Part IV of the Report of the Massachusetts Bureau of Statistics of Labor contains the comparative prices and cost of living here and in Great Britain for the period 1860 to 1883. The details furnished are very elaborate. The cost of living is acknowledged to be higher in Massachusetts than in Great Britain, and the report aims to show in what respect. In Great Britain in 1883 groceries were .83 per cent. higher than in 1872; provisions 10.39 per cent. lower and fuel 41.26 per cent. lower. In 1872 groceries were 23.06 per cent. higher here than there; provisions 25.74 per cent higher there, and fuel 60.19 per cent. higher here. In 1883 groceries were 16.18 per cent higher here; provisions 23.08 higher there, and fuel 104.96 higher here. In 1883 for all grades of dry goods prices were 13.26 per cent. higher here, but for medium and lower grades used by workingmen Great Britain had an advantage of only .9 of 1 per cent. All grades of shoes and slippers show an average of 62.59 per cent. higher here than there, but considering only medium and low grade, the price is only 42.75 per cent. higher here. In 1883 in all grades of clothing the average price was 45.06 per cent. higher here, but medium and low grades averaged only 27.36 per cent. higher, while the better grades averaged 56.57 per cent. higher. Rents in 1883 averaged 89 62 per cent. higher in Massachusetts than in Great Britain. Here the average rent of one room was 66 cents a week, $2.86 a month and $34.38 a year, while there it was 35 cents a week, $1.51 a month and $18.02 a year. Returns for board and lodging are very complete, and show an average of 39 01 per cent. higher here than there. In 1883 board and lodging here for men averaged $4.79 a week, and for women $3.19. Board alone averaged $3.84 a week for men and $2.56 for women. Lodging alone averaged $2.20 a week for men and $1.46 for women. The Massachusetts family averages to earn 55.27 per cent. more than the family in Great Britain. The head of the family averages 80.31 per cent. more here and the total family expenses here are 48.41 per cent. higher than there. Here a family averages to spend 93.89 per cent. of its income and to save 6.11 per cent. surplus. There it spends 98.24 per cent., and has only 1.76 per cent. for savings.

The report corroborates the economic laws of Dr. Engel, of Prussia: "The greater the income the smaller the relative outlay for subsistence; the percentage of outlay for clothing is approximately the same, whatever the income; the percentage of outlay for lodging, or rent, and for fuel and light is invariably the same, whatever the income; as the income increases in amount the percentage of outlay for sundries becomes greater." The average annual family expenditure in Massachusetts for 1883 was $754.42, and in Great Britain was $508 35. Items of expense here were as follows: Subsistence, 51.76 per cent.; clothing, 16 32; rent, 16.25; fuel, 9.10; sundries, 10 57. In Great Britain they were: subsistence, 56 45; clothing, 15.54; rent, 13.66; fuel, 4.83; sundries, 9.52. Conclusions of the comparison are: "that, on any basis of yearly expenditure, the prices of articles entering into the cost of living were, on the average, 17.29 per cent. higher in Massachusetts in 1883 than in Great Britain; that of this figure 11.49 per cent. was due to higher rents in Massachusetts, leaving 5.80 per cent. as indicative of the higher cost of living in Massachusetts as compared with Great Britain as regards the remaining elements of expense." The "grand result" of the comparison is "that the higher prices in Massachusetts are represented by 5.80 per cent.; that the increased accommodations in housing and the general higher standard of living maintained by Massachusetts workingmen as compared with the standard of living of workingmen in Great Britain is represented by 42.61 per cent. out of the total greater cost of 48.41 per cent, or stated as a direct ratio, the standard of living of Massachusetts workingmen is to that of the workingmen of Great Britain as 1.42 is to 1."

Make Home Happy.

Do not jest with your wife upon a subject in which there is danger of hurting her feelings. Remember, she treasures every word you utter. Do not speak of some virtue in another man's wife to remind your own of a fault. Do not reproach your wife of personal defects, for if she has sensibility you inflict a wound difficult to heal. Do not treat your wife with inattention in company. It touches her pride, and she will not love you more or respect you better for it. Do not upbraid your wife in the presence of strangers; the sense of your regard for her feelings will prevent her from acknowledging her fault. Do not entertain your wife with the praises of other women, or their accomplishments. If you would have a pleasant home and a cheerful wife pass your evenings under your own roof. Do not be stern in your own house and remarkable in your sociability elsewhere; and, above all, remember that from a happy home it is not far to heaven.

Why Labor and Capital Can't Unite.

The coming question is, how to divide the profits fairly between labor and capital and give each their proper share. Unfortunately, labor cannot share losses. If $50,000 is made one year, labor steps in for its share. If the same is lost next year, capital must sustain the loss, as labor spent what it made the previous year and cannot refund what it has not got. When labor gets foolminded enough to make a fair deal on losses as well as profits, does not [illegible] a capitalist [illegible] has much [illegible] a man to work [illegible] to pay [illegible] a capitalist? A PRIMITIVE COURT DAY.

The Bar and the Courts Together for Good Time.

A correspondent of the New York Evening Post, writing from Hamilton county, N. Y., says:—

"Sageville, at the head of Lake Pleasant, three and a half miles west, figured largely in these reminiscences, and thither we rowed one day along the winding shores of the lake. It is the county seat of Hamilton county, but cat its importance be overestimated, we will add that Hamilton, although the second largest county in the State, contains but 2,293 inhabitants, and that the one church, clergyman, physician or lawyer which it boasts are not located in Sageville. Seclusion and primitiveness are written over the little hamlet. The smart court-house, with its pillared portico, and little stone jail beside it, are marked interlopers, quite out of harmony with the ancient tavern and weather-beaten structures that constitute the village proper. The first visitor here found the sole prisoner hoeing in the jailer's cabbage patch. The present pilgrim found the jail empty and the jailer whistling lonesomely on the steps. Hamilton county is certainly law-abiding. There is a little chapel in charge of a circuit-rider, whose circuit embraces twenty-four miles of mountain road and three preaching places, services being held at Sageville every other Sunday. The alternate Sundays "don't count," as an old mountaineer explained, and are spent in hunting, fishing, and other profane occupations. But on court days Sageville assumes that serious and dignified air befitting its position. There are two of these days annually—the second Monday in June and the first in October. To the mountaineer court day is a high festival; the hard-worked Circuit Judge also looks forward to it as a respite. To the attending lawyers it assures a delightful introduction to mountain air, beauty, and merry-making. That serious business will occupy their attention is not once thought of, for, with one exception, not in the memory of man has a case of importance occupied the attention of the County Court of Hamilton. One the eve of court-day the Judge arrives, splashed and bespattered by the villainous county roads, and is made comfortable at the tavern in the room reserved for state occasions. The evening brings a complement of lawyers. Next morning court opens with due formalities, and after a decent interval, no business appearing, adjourns, perhaps to engage in a deer hunt, but more often to reassemble in the capacious bar-room of the tavern for story-telling and a comparison of the year's experiences. His Honor presides, and beams genially on his legal children; the Sheriff occupies the seat of honor on his right, and the lawyers contribute their brightest witticisms and raciest tales; or an ancient mountaineer, famous for his skill at drawing the long bow, entertains the company. In the evening a grand ball in honor of the occasion is given in one of the village houses. The disciples of Blackstone attend in all the impressiveness of 'store clothes,' the beauty and chivalry of the mountains gather to meet them, and the dance is tripped until daylight sends the revellers home."

An Eccentric Captain.

A MILITARY MOVEMENT WITH AN UNEXPECTED OUTCOME.

"Our captain was a straight up and down disciplinarian, and was always rushing into a fight," said a veteran to a Chicago Inter-Ocean gossiper. "One day, while in a camp in West Virginia, he ordered the company formed in light fighting order, and coming out of his tent, placed himself at the head, and without explanation, we marched away at a swinging quickstep. Scarcely a word was spoken during that march of three or four miles up a mountain road, but as the captain directed the march along the bridal path, the boys nodded at each other as much as to say, 'This means trouble for somebody.' We moved along this path until we came to a ridge. We skirted along the lower edge of this until came the order to front face and deploy. We went up the hill stumbling over stones and briars, the captain exerting himself to keep the line without a kink or curve. Suddenly he gave the order to halt and to fix bayonets. The boys began to think the old codger had lost his senses, when he thundered out in measured tones: 'I call the attention of the men who have obeyed my orders so unquestioningly, that there lies not more than five paces in front of them the finest patch of luscious blackberries I ever saw in my life. I discovered them yesterday, and after tasting them resolved to make a secret raid. And here we are. The men will stick their rifles, bayonets down in the ground, and proceed to pick and eat blackberries.'"

Gross Carelessness.

During the war with the South, there was a certain company of raw recruits marching rapidly to the front. Their way to the outpost led along a Virginia road which stretched over rolling country that was dotted here and there with clumps of trees. At a turning they saw ahead of them a pine grove which grew about a hundred yards to the left of their path, but they were unaware that in its midst a squad of rebel cavalry was lying in ambush. As the company got abreast of the timber, the guerillas opened a scattering fire on their flank. It was the first time that the recruits had heard bullets singing over their heads, and, moreover, they had no idea that the enemy was within five miles of them, so that they were uncertain how to regard this demonstration. The squad halted, undetermined what to do; and one big Germar, after putting his hands to his mouth trumpet-fashion, shouted toward the timber: "Say, boys[illegible]" and then turned excitedly to the officer in command, exclaiming: "Where do dey get dem? I'll go any place Ad to [illegible]

Gambling Dying Out.

A professional gambler who has just returned from a tour of the West, says business is bad out there. At Denver all the doors are open, but the bets are so small that no one feels like fighting over them or even talking about them. At St. Louis and Kansas City, both of which were once noted as sporting centres, not a single gambling house is open. The law against it is very severe. On most of the Mississippi boats, where the heaviest business used to be done, gambling is positively prohibited. The Mayor of Chicago has it in his power to shut every shop in the city if he wants to, while in Eastern cities the betting is mostly "on change," which is distasteful to regular gamblers. New Orleans, with its licensed gambling houses, is the principal winter resort, and there a big business is done from December to June. There is a general feeling among the fraternity that all the States will pass stringent laws and the professionals will be driven to the pool room.—Cleveland Leader.

An Editor's Testimonial.

A. M. Vaughan, editor of the Greenwich Review, Greenwich, O., writes: "Last January I met with a very severe accident, caused by a runaway horse. I used almost every kind of salve to heal the wounds, which turned to running sores, but found nothing to do me any good till I was recommended Henry's Carbolic Salve. I bought a box, and it helped me at once, and at the end of two months I was completely well. It is the best salve in the market, and I never fail of telling my friends about it, and urge them to use it whenever in need."

THE THREE MAIDS.

Three maids went forth the lovely world to see,
Three maids, their names Faith, Hope and Charity;
Each with her separate mission to unfold,
Apart, yet one, a happy band behold.
Three maids went wand'ring o'er the weary earth,
Seeking to give mankind a nobler worth.
Naught would they take; to give was their intent,
Riches beyond the world in their extent.
Three maids returned; footsore, and faint and sad.
Heavy at heart where erst they had been glad.
For all their gifts in this great world of sin,
Few would accept, and none would take them in. —Temple Bar.

A SHROUD OF FIRE.

It was a golden harvest day, late in September, and the men of the frontier settlement of Warren, hidden away in the heart of a vast Kentucky forest, were at work on their respective clearings, cutting and binding the ripe golden wheat, when, like a huge thunder-cloud, overspreading the sky at midnoon, a large party of savages made a descent upon the settlement; and, in less than half an hour from the time terror had been struck deep into their hearts by the first terrible warwhoop, every one in that little community had been murdered in cold blood, save a youth of nineteen, Harry Philips by name, who, upon the first alarm, had hidden in the tall wheat, and thus far escaped the fell eyes of the enemy.

So near was his hiding-place to the cabins, that he had heard every shriek made by the women and children as they were butchered by the red fiends; and more than once he was on the point of rushing out to their defense, all unarmed as he was. But the love of life is implanted so deep in every heart, and the certainty that he could render them no aid, held him back; and with his hands to his ears to shut out the horrid sounds, he lay, expecting every moment that he would be discovered and subjected to the terrible fate which was being meted out to his friends.

At last it seemed that the fell work of the savages was done.

The groans and shrieks had died away, and no sound met his ear save the rustling of the tall wheat above him, as it waved back and forward in the gentle breeze.

For several moments the silence continued, and he had begun to congratulate himself that they had departed, when the loud crackling of flames announced that one or more of the cabins had been set on fire.

There had been no rain for several days, and the timber that formed the roof of the cabins was dry and in the best condition for the flames to prey upon.

The crackling of the flames grew louder and louder, and he was soon enabled to see that the roof of the cabin nearest him was one sheet of flame; and, as it was not more than half a dozen rods from where he was concealed, he already could feel the heat where he lay.

If the wheat should ignite his danger, he knew, would be doubly increased; for danger from the flames would be added to the knives of the savages; and to escape from one would only be to drive him upon the other, which would be certain death.

The flames licked up the dry walls of the cabin, and with every moment the heat increased. To move he dare not, for fear the savages would see the agitation of the wheat which would result from his motions. There seemed no alternative but to remain where he was, at least so long as it was possible for him to do so, rather than run the risk of moving.

But it was fated that he should not remain undisturbed.

The savages had only begun their work of devastation by fire. They had divided, several being allotted to the burning of each cabin, and when this had been accomplished, they turned their attention to the ripe fields of wheat that, during the summer, had been the pride and hope of the settlers, but now, like them, doomed to destruction.

Torches were applied in a dozen places to each field, and the ripened stalk of the grain, and the long spell of dry weather that had preceded this terrible day, made it an easy prey to the devouring element; and, almost immediately upon the application of the torches, the black smoke and cinders filled the air like a cloud.

Harry was unaware of his danger, until he saw the huge volume of smoke soaring over him, and even then he did not know but that it might proceed from the burning cabins.

He did not dare raise his head to see, but his suspicions soon became a certainty; for, as he lay, with his face to the ground, he saw the red flames rushing toward him, through the yellow stalks of the ripened grain. Two deaths stared him in the face—one from the hands of the savages, dripping with the blood of their victims; and the other from the no less merciless flames.

He might escape from the savages under the cover of the smoke, but if he lay where he was a minute longer the forked tongues of the flames would be eating into his flesh. He took the chance that gave hope of life, and [illegible] bounded on every side by smoke and flames, and then bounded away to the edge of the forest, about thirty yards distant.

[illegible] he could [illegible]

With all the strength at his command the youth sprang toward the line of forest trees which promised him shelter and refuge; but despite his efforts he made but little headway, for the wheat was stout and thick, and impeded his progress sadly. Yet every nerve was brought to the task, for he knew that life or death depended upon his efforts.

He had gone over perhaps one-third of the distance, and had gained somewhat on the flames that were following madly in his rear, and thus far the dense smoke had proved a shield that the eyes of the savages could not penetrate; but now the horror of the youth can be imagined, when he saw a bright line of flames spring up on the outer edge of the field, toward which he was flying, and heard the shouts of the red devils, who had set this new trap into which he was running, and who now caught a glimpse of him springing madly toward them.

Suspecting that some of their intended victims might be secreted amid the wheat, they had fired the edges all about the field, to insure their destruction.

The shouts of the savages that had caught sight of Harry were echoed by their companions, and nearly the entire party surrounded the field, determined to hem him in, so that there should be no escape from the flames for the last survivor of their victims.

The heart of Harry Phillips sank within him. A circle of roaring, hissing flames around him on every side rushing swiftly toward him, and darting out red tongues as if in haste to wrap him in a robe of fire; and outside of this a circle of blood-thirsty savages, whose cruelty was equal to that of the blazing element that hemmed him in.

The youth had a brave heart, but it was like lead in his bosom as he comprehended the terrible danger by which he was surrounded.

With the speed of a race-horse the red flames came on behind him; already they were scorching his body with the heat of a fiery furnace, yet why should he stir from his place?

By going further on he might prolong his life for a moment, but already the flames in advance were rushing toward him and the relief would be but momentary; but we cling to life so long as it can be spun out, and Harry, though he saw no hope of escape, sprang forward, and a moment more the red flames were crackling where he had stood.

A few yards further on and the huge trunk of a fallen tree lay before him.

The limbs had been cut off by the settlers, but the body was so huge that they had not attempted to remove it when the field had been prepared for the sowing of the wheat.

As his eye rested upon it a new-born hope of escape flashed to the mind of the danger-encircled youth.

He well knew that the trunk of the fallen pine was hollow and that the cavity was sufficiently large to admit of his crawling in for a considerable distance. Here was an escape from the flames, at least, and it might be that the savages would think that he had dashed through the flames and escaped in some direction under the cover of the dense smoke and would not think to examine his hiding place.

The shell of the tree was of considerable thickness and he knew that if it burned readily it would be some time before the flame could penetrate to him and in the interval the savages might take their departure.

To adopt this expedient and to put it into execution was but the work of a few moments, and ensconced at the other end of the aperture he waited with alternate hope and fear for the onset of the flames, and time that should decide his own fate.

Not long had he to wait.

With a roar like a tempest they came on, and he could feel their hot breath through a narrow crevice in his shelter, which had been rent in its giant side by falling, and which served as breathing-place, without which it would have been impossible to have obtained air, as his body and clothing filled the aperture almost completely.

For a few moments the flames raged above him like the blast of a furnace, but the heat was soon exhausted and the surge passed on; but Harry could still hear the flames crackling above him, and know from this that the tree was burning; but this gave him no uneasiness, as he knew if he remained in his present position it would be several hours before the fire could reach him, if it did at all, which was doubtful, as he found from the touch that the inside of the shell was wet and soggy, and, therefore, would not burn readily.

Wait and trust was all that could be done. Wait until the savages had left, and trust that that would be soon, convinced that under the cover of the smoke he had made his escape.

It was but a few minutes from the time the fire was set before all that remained of the field of waving grain was the charred black earth, from which the smoke was rising in many places; and no sooner had the flames subsided, so that it was possible for them to venture, are the savages, who during this time had kept up their fiendish yells, [illegible] the ground for the reason of the [illegible] weather had are escapes from the fiery circle with which they had surrounded him.

It was several minutes before the ground had been fully explored, and to their amazement, they could find no trace of the one whom they doomed to the fire, and they had nearly arrived at the conclusion that he had escaped under the cover of the smoke, when the attention of one of them was attracted by the burning trunk of the fallen pine. He called to the others, and in a moment the whereabouts of the youth was known to them all. Harry, in forcing himself into the aperture, had disturbed the light soil at the end of the log, and where his feet had been indented was still plainly visible, notwithstanding the fire; and the little hope that had crept into the heart of the youth, went out, for well he knew by their words, that his hiding-place was discovered, and that he was again at their mercy.

For a few minutes the savages consulted together as to the best method of disposing of him, and at last it was agreed among them, that the aperture at the end of the log should be closed up securely, and then fresh fuel heaped upon the trunk, until it should be consumed along with its inmate.

The horror of Harry Philips can be better imagined than described, as in pursuance of this infernal resolution the red demons with a large stone securely closed the entrance, so that it would be impossible for the inmate of the shell to dislodge it. Then he heard them depart and ere long return with the fresh fuel, which they heaped above him; and the red flames, taking new life therefrom, turned the log again into a shroud of living fire.

Well the youth knew that a terrible death was nigh upon him; but not a cry came from his lips for the red demons to glory in.

He had looked upon the green earth and the blue sky for the last time, and his lips moved in prayer to Him above, before whom he expected to appear. His hold on his life seemed gone; and yet there was help near at hand of which he little dreamed.

A strong force of whites, headed by Logan, the scout, had been upon the trail of the devastating savages for two days, and they now suddenly appeared upon the scene, and the first intimation that the redskins had of their presence was a volley of bullets, that fell among those who were heaping the fuel upon the log, like hail upon a pile of tender corn.

For a moment they were dismayed by the suddenness of the attack; but they soon recovered themselves, and being joined by their comrades, a battle raged, that for fierceness was not exceeded by any in all the Indian wars. The result for a time appeared uncertain, but at last the savages were routed, leaving half their number killed and wounded upon the field.

A few moments later, as the whites were busy in caring for some of their wounded comrades, they were startled by a faint sound that appeared to come from the burning pile near them. An investigation showed the stone rolled against the aperture, and when it had been removed Harry Philips came forth from his fiery shroud unscathed, much to the astonishment of those to whom he owed his life, who regarded his preservation much in the light of a miracle.

March of the Mahdi.

El Mahdi has ordered that a force of 50,000 men from the Bagara and Shillok tribes reinforce Osman Digna. The Bishareens have decided in favor of the Mahdi. Kassala is closely blockaded. Eight of the Turkish mutineers at Assiout were sentenced to death. Two were shot. The sentence of the others was commuted to penal servitude for life.

Further accounts of the late mutiny of Turkish troops at Assiout tend to show the serious nature of the affair, and the courage of Colonel Grant, who, leaving the other English officers and the armed residents to protect Assiout, followed the thirty-three mutineers down the line, accompanied only by five Egyptians. At a considerable distance from Assiout, finding that they had crossed the river, he followed them and came up with them. At such odds, far from the possibility of succor, the five Egyptians might well have hesitated, if they did not side with the mutineers. Colonel Grant's summons to the Turks to surrender was, therefore, the height of audacity, and when it was replied to by firing, the situation seemed desperate. The Colonel, however, killing the first man, wounded two more with successive shots, took hold of a fourth and literally cowed the whole party into a surrender, bringing them back with him to Assiout. The second mutiny was suppressed as much by judgment as the other had been by courage. Some of the men refused to proceed, and insisted on returning. No immediate force being available, Colonel Grant gave his consent, thus dividing the party. While they were returning, the mutineers were met by twenty soldiers of the Duke of Cornwall's light infantry. At the words "Present, fire!" the mutineers fell on their faces and were [illegible]; and the remainder were easily captured.

MEN AND MULES RUN MAD.

AN EPIDEMIC OF HYDROPHOBIA ON AN ALABAMA PLANTATION.

Thirty-two Negroes Sick from Eating a Pig that had been Bitten by a Mad Dog—The Planter's Wild Race to Escape a Mad Mule.

A dispatch from Eufaula, Ala., dated Aug. 28th says—The people in this neighborhood are in a state of tremendous excitement over the wholesale spread of hydrophobia on the plantation of Punch Doughtie. Dr. E. B. Johnson has just returned from Mr. Doughtie's plantation where he had been summoned. He found thirty-two persons suffering with a disease which he at once pronounced hydrophobia in a mild form. All the sufferers are negroes. Three of them are desparately sick, one being in the throes of delirium, and so low that the doctor says he is liable to die at any moment.

More than three weeks ago a hog bitten by a dog died on Mr. Doughtie's plantation and was given to the negroes to be converted into soap grease. Instead of utilising it for this purpose, thirty-two negroes on the place and in the neighborhood ate the flesh of the hog.

Mr. Doughtie says that on July 25, one of his dogs went mad and bit a mule and several hogs. On Aug. 13, the first hog died, and was eaten by the negroes. Two more died on Aug 18, one on Aug. 22, and one on Aug. 27, and all were eaten except the last, when the partakers of the poisoned flesh became sick. The mule exhibited signs of madness on the nineteenth day after being bitten. Eleven days after the hog was eaten, ten of the negroes were taken sick. Two days ago another dog was discovered to be mad, and was killed after having bitten a mule. Another dog on the lot is now housed, and will be experimented with for a cure. The dog that bit the mule and hogs disappeared, and the whole neighborhood is in terror lest he went among the cattle and hogs throughout the belt before dying.

A dozen out of the thirty-two eaters of the affected hogs are seriously sick, and the developments among the others are awaited with the greatest interest. Dr. Johnson, an able physician, says that it is a terrible case, and that he fears the worst. He says that it would not surprise him if the greater number of the thirty-two persons died.

A few days ago Mr. Doughtie rode out, at the request of a field hand, to inspect the condition of one of his mules, which was acting strangely. On reaching the pasture where a dozen mules were, the animal Mr. Doughtie was riding neighed, which attracted the attention of the other animals, and the sick one particularly, which immediately rushed on the mule and rider, and seized the saddle of the animal with his teeth. Mr. Doughtie dismounted and succeeded in loosening the mad mule's hold, but no sooner was this done than the infuriated beast turned upon his owner, who fled for his life, pursued by the mule. There was a desparate race of a quarter of a mile through undergrowth, and Mr. Doughtie only saved himself by dodging around saplings. A small stretch of clearing intervened between the woods and the house, and the terrified man took a life-and-death chance on making it. Before leaving the woods the mule had bitten out a piece of Mr. Doughtie's coat, and while manœuvring around the tree, the animal bit himself savagely in several places, tearing out a mouthful of flesh each time. The race for the house was a close one; and just as Mr. Doughtie reached the top of the fence the mule overtook him on a dead run, but instead of reaching his victim, struck his head against a fence post in a wild rush and was knocked senseless. The mule was afterward killed by Mr. Doughtie.

It is now reported that the whole herd of mules are affected. Many of them have leaped the fences and will doubtless, spread the disease among other animals in the neighborhood. The community is at a loss how to arrest the disease.

Round Hats.

Harper's Bazar says: Round hats are in the ample and compact shape worn during the summer, with rather high crown, and a narrow brim that is rolled alike on both sides and in front, or it may be pointed upward directly above the forhead, or slightly wider on the left side, but it is always very narrow behind, hats being designed, as the bonnets are, to be worn with the hair dressed high. Felt hats trimmed with velvet and a bunch of feathers directly in front will be most used, but there are also many velvet hats trimmed with China crape that may be plain or else embroidered with gold. The velvet trimming is a smooth or folded band around the crown, and a facing on the brim. The ornamental galloons and passementeries are sometimes added on this velvet facing. Wing clusters made up of small pointed wings are much used on round hats. The shapely pointed Pierrot hats, sometimes [illegible] and [illegible] are shown in felt [illegible] for girls and misses. THE LAST MATCH.

A Little Sketch of the Ill-fated Greely Expedition.

Old soldiers who remember the picket line and the rifle pit, old hunters, and even the experienced picknicker, know well what it is to be reduced to the last match. That sole occupant of the pocket match-safe is the last chance for a fire, for a torch in the thick darkness, for a savory meal or a dish of tea, for a flash of light on a watch face or a compass. So, too, it may be all that interposes between the destruction and the deliverance of a lost or shipwrecked band.

Few incidents of the famous Greely expedition to the northern seas make so vivid an impression upon the mind as one recorded by Sergeant George B. Rice, who did not live to return to his home and friends. A sledge party was detailed to visit and examine Hall's Rest on the coast of Greenland. In the course of this expedition the stock of matches that the men had brought was reduced to one. It was a miserably cold evening, when the shivering group of men gathered in their damp tent to watch the attempt to ignite, by this single match, the spirit lamp upon which their lives depended. The lamp once lighted, there was warmth and warm food at their command; the lamp unlighted, there was not vital force left in the party to resist the fatal chill of the Arctic night. With what breathless interest the experiment was watched, we can scarcely imagine.

"The match," wrote Sergeant Rice in his diary, "snapped, crackled, and showed a little flame which by dexterous management was communicated to the wood and triumphantly applied to the wick of the spirit lamp. But, the wick is wet from the falling moisture of the tent! It sputters—fizzles—the match itself is burned up to the benumbed fingers of the holder, when one of the agonized spectators springs from his bag and, with admirable presence of mind, withdraws from his breast pocket a document, which he holds to the expiring match in time to perpetuate its fire. They are saved!"

But this is not all the story. The sergeant intimates that the "document" that saved their lives was far more precious than anything documentary. It was the last fond and tender epistle which its owner had received from his sweetheart before sailing. He had worn it as an amulet next his heart, and would have died rather than surrender it at any ordinary call. To save his comrades he drew it forth, and gave it to nourish the flame which alone could warm them back to life.

Sergeant Rice concludes the day's entry by expressing the wish that the burning of the letter to assist the match made on earth may conduce to the consummation of the "match made in heaven." Who will not lament that the worthy and witty soldier did not survive to witness the realization of his desire?

The Latest Fashions.

AUTUMN DRESSES.

The woolen dresses imported for street suits for the early autumn are distinguished by severe plainness in design and in trimmings, depending for their beauty on the fine fit of the corsage and the graceful flowing lines of the skirt and its drapery. The corsage may, if preferred, be a simple round waist without basque or sash, merely finished by a belt ribbon with front bow. This round waist is long, and has high darts that give an appearance of slenderness; the back may have either one or two side forms on each side, and there is a seam down the middle; the standing collar is very high and the shoulders are short, meeting a sleeve that is rounded high on the front, but which has less of the padded puffed fullness about the armhole than those lately worn. These details are confined to the lining of the dress, as the outside may be put on in varied ways; thus it may be laid smoothly upon the lining or it may be gathered at the neck and waist line in front and back, or else the gathers may be confined to the front only and the back may be quite plain; or, again, the fullness may be only at the belt and spread out in fan style, becoming plain on the shoulders; or, still further, this fullness may be held in small pleats or tucks instead of gathers. The preference, however, for heavy wool goods is for the plain smooth waist, and this can be diversified by introducing a vest, or a square plastron which may be full or flat, or by the use of revers or bretelles extending from the shoulders to the waist. Modistes here prefer to make round waists separate from the skirt, lengthening it a few inches below the waist line, and thrusting that part under the belt to which the skirts are attached; on English dresses, however, the skirts are sewed permanently to the waist, which is finished by a welting cord in the old fashioned way. —Harper's Bazar.

A RAILROAD DISASTER.

Reminiscences of the Accident at Gasconade Bridge in Missouri.

The presence in Denver of Mr. C. A. Reed, the Chicago Traveling Agent of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway, calls to mind one of the most horrible railway disasters that is known in the annals of railroading. It occurred in October, 1857, at the time of the opening of the Missouri Pacific Railway from St. Louis to Jefferson City, Missouri, and it is known as the Gasconade bridge disaster. In the morning of the day on which the accident happened sixteen coaches filled with the most prominent men of St. Louis started out from that city filled with the brightest anticipations of a delightful trip, and among the passengers was Mr. Reed. In the train there was also a commissary car filled with the choicest wines and liquors, and amply supplied with eatables. Eighty-eight miles west of St. Louis the Gasconade River empties into the Missouri, and within sight of the latter stream the railway stream crosses the Gasconade. The bridge over the Gasconade had been tested, and so confident was the engineer who built it that he rode upon the locomotive. When the train reached this bridge the passengers were in the midst of luncheon, and the white-aproned darkeys were in the act of carrying the wines and liquors through the cars, and no thought of danger appeared to enter the minds of a single one of the hundreds who were upon the train. Suddenly the crash came and the engine plunged through the broken bridge into the river below. It was followed by several of the cars, while all but one of the others were jerked from the rails and thrown across the track. A scene which is beyond description followed and the destruction of life was fearful. Mr. Reed was sitting next to the window, about the centre of one of the cars, and he attributes his escape to the fact that he had just a moment or so before raised the window. The weather was misty and he desired to look at a steamboat which was opposite them in the Missouri River, and he raised the window for the purpose of getting a clearer view. When the crash came his car plunged forward into the water, but the rear portion of it rested on the unbroken part of the bridge. Mr. Reed caught the side of the window with his hands and this prevented him from falling into the front part of the car, as it stood upon end in the water. Almost all the other passengers fell, a confused and mangled mass, into the end of the car and with them went the stove and other articles not securely fastened. The gentleman who sat in the same seat with Mr. Reed was one of those who fell forward, and he was also among the killed. Altogether there were forty-four persons killed in the accident and about fifteen subsequently died from their injuries. There was only one lady in the party and she escaped without the slightest injury. The civil engineer who built the bridge and who was riding on the engine was among the dead.

To this day the accident on the Gasconade bridge is spoken of in Missouri as one of the most horrible of which the people of that State have any knowledge.—Denver Tribune.

An Adventure in a Bridge.

Once upon a time—a good many years ago—a lady and gentleman got permission to walk through the tubular bridge at Conway, Ireland, which was then a curiosity. A railway porter was with them and told them no train was expected on that line, so they went into the tube and darkness. A strange gentleman who had joined them went on first, because the lady could not go so quickly and, of course, her husband remained to assist her over the rails and stones and the girders which support the sides. But when the couple had got half way through the first man was at the end and saw the down Irish mail approaching on the very line on which his acquaintance were! He called out, "Take care of yourselves, a train is coming," and then he waved his hands to the engine driver. The lady and gentleman in the "tube" could not stand up at the side and so they hurried back. It was a terrible race. The "Wild Irishmen" whistling and roaring, hissing and straining at the brakes close behind; in front only a few yards to the station, but such long yards! On came the train, and just as the gentleman rushed from the "tube" and dragged the lady down, the express came out grinding and growling. They were only just saved by two yards from a terrible death.—Little Folks' Magazine.

Doctor (who has been sent for at 2 a. m.)—"Madame, pray send at once for the clergyman, and, if you want to make your will, for the lawyer." Madame (horrified)—"Good gracious! Is it so dangerous, doctor?" Doctor—"Not a bit of it; but I don't want to be the only fool who has been disturbed on his sleep for nothing."

CHILTON VIEW.

Published Every Thursday Morning.

CLANTON, ALA., OCT. 9, 1884.

There is a kind of impression going the rounds now that Ohio will go Democratic.

The tax collector of Mobile county is behind with the state taxes of 1883 because, as he says, the taxpayers of his county asked indulgence and he felt obliged to grant their request.

Candidates for railroad commissioners are numerous, and the senators are already being besieged. The election will take place near the close of the general assembly, and is made by the senate from names nominated by the governor.

Blaine, of Maine, has been on exhibition at the various Ohio fairs during the past ten days. His managers enter him as the "great and only genuine American brick bear," and he carries off the premium every pop.—Ex.

A national convention of drummers met in Cincinnati on Thursday last and nominated the redoubtable Joseph Mulhatton for President. It is said that 60,000 drummers will vote to a man for the candidate. The majority of the drummers of the country being Republicans, Blaine will be the loser.

A very queer accident, which might, if it had proved serious, been construed into a suicide, happened last Sunday at Tuskegee. Mr. Barney DuBose, while ringing the church bell, was caught around the neck by the rope and jerked up about seven feet, very near choking the life out of him before he could extricate himself.

Grand Jury Report.

We note the following items of interest reported by the Grand Jury of the Fall Term of the Circuit Court:

"The jail is safe but needs repair. Prisoners are properly cared for.

The books of the county officers are in good order. Attention being called to the special neat order of the books and office of the circuit clerk.

Balance of funds in county Treasurer's hands $631.33.

Balance of funds in hands of county Supt. of education $1,757.50.

Proper vouchers on hand for all disbursements by said officers.

Attention called to the bad condition of the streets of Clanton, and the county commissioners requested to act in relation thereto.

The bond of the Treasurer was recomended to be made stronger. Other bonds sufficient."

Newspapers North and South.

The Greensboro Beacon, edited by the veteran Maj. John G. Harvey, says:

Owing to the density of population in the North, as compared with that of the South, and to the fact that newspaper reading is much more common, especially among the poorer classes, in the North than in the south, a much larger circulation can be secured for northern than for southern papers. The chief cost in getting up a paper is that of setting up the matter. The price, therefore, at which a newspaper can be furnished depends upon the number of subscribers. In the northern cities, it is not a difficult matter to secure for a weekly of ordinary merit 5,000 to 10,000 subscribers. Many have double that number, a few, more than ten times ten thousand. Of course papers with such large lists of subscribers can be published at a very small fraction above the prime cost of the paper.

The poorest people in the North, as a general rule, read newspapers. We frequently noticed while residing in New York, that the old women who sold pinders and flag root, and probably did not realize over 25 cents, if that much, on their day's sales, were in the habit of investing one or two cents a day in a newspaper.

Many men in the South who spend 20 or more dollars for tobacco, and as much more for whiskey, when pressed to subscribe for a newspaper, will tell you that they cannot afford to do so. They are too poor to indulge in that unnecessary expense. We had a subscriber eight or ten years ago—a worthy man, by the way—who requested us to discontinue his paper as he was unable to pay for it. We inquired of him if he could not better diminish his expenditures in some other line,—that of tobacco, for instance. He replied by asking us how much we supposed he spent a year for tobacco. We replied probably $25. He said he spent over $50. And yet he claimed to discontinue his paper because he did not feel able to [illegible]

ADDRESS.

Of the National Democratic Committee.

To the People of the United States:

The national democratic party of the United States has pledged itself to purify the administration of public affairs from corruption; to manage the government with economy; to enforce the execution of the laws and to reduce taxation to the lowest limit consistent with just protection to American labor and capital, and with the preservation of the faith which the nation has pledged, to its creditors and pensioners.

The open record of the man whom it has named as its candidate for the presidency, has been accepted by thousands of independent republicans in every state, as an absolute guarantee that, if he is elected, all these pledges will be exactly fulfilled, and that under his administration, good government will be assured.

To secure these results all good citizens must unite in defeating the republican candidate for president. His history in political methods make it certain that his administration would be stained by gross abuses, by official misconduct and a wanton expenditure of the public money, and would be marked by an increase of taxation which would blight the honest industry of our people.

Against us, and against those honorable republicans who, for the sake of good government, have made common cause with us, notable combinations have been made.

These are chiefly made up of four classes.

First.—An army of officeholders, who, by choice or compulsion, are now giving to republican committees, as parts of the campaign fund of that party, monies paid to such officers out of the public treasury for services due to the people of the United States.

Second.—Organized bodies of men who, having secured by corrupt means the imposition of duties, which are in excess of all sums needed for the wants of the government and for the protection of American labor and capital, and having thus gained enormous wealth, are willing to pay largely to the republican campaign fund for the promise of the continuance and increase of such duties which constitute a system of bounties to monopolies under the false pretense of protection to American industry.

Third.—A host of unscrupulous contractors and jobbers, who have grown rich upon public plunder, and are ready to pay tithes of what they have acquired in order to avoid all risk of being called to account for the evil methods by which their wealth has been gained.

Fourth.—Corporations which, having appropriated the public lands by the aid of corrupt agencies in the republican party, believe they will be compelled to give up their ill-gotten gains if that party is driven from power, and are, therefore, willing to keep it in place by giving it a percentage of their unrighteous profits.

This committee has not troops of officeholders at its command.

It will not agree to sell the future legislation of congress for money paid now into its party treasury.

It will not promise immunity to thieves.

It will not contract to uphold any corrupt bargain heretofore made by the republican party with any corporation, for all the wealth which such corporation can offer.

It appeals to the people against one and all of these opponents, thus corruptly banded together against the friends of good government.

The number of all these opponents is small, but their wealth is great, and it will be unscrupulously used. An active and vigorous campaign must be made against them. Their paid advocates must be met and defeated in debate upon the platform and in discussion in the newspapers. The organization of all who are opposed to them must be perfected in every state, city and county in the land. Money is needed to do this honest work. Your committee, refusing to adopt the methods by which the republican party fills its treasury, calls upon all good citizens for the aid which it requires.

It invites, and will welcome, contributions from every honest man who is opposed to the election of James G. Blaine as president. No contribution will be counted too small. Whenever a bank, banker, or postal money order office can be found, the means exist for placing at the disposal of the treasurer of this committee, individual, or collective contributions in aid of the great cause in which we are engaged—or, money may be remitted by mail, to Charles J. Canda, treasurer, at No. 11 West 24th street, New York.

When victory is achieved over the unscrupulous combination, which is now endeavoring to thrust James G. Blaine into the presidential office, the recorded list of such contributors will be a roll of honor, such as no other party in this country has ever possessed.

Our opponents cannot be saved from disaster by forcing their unwilling candidate to speak to assemblages of the people.

The man who wrote the Fisher letters will never be the choice of the people for the presidency of the United States.

ARTHUR P. GORMAN,
Chairman Democratic National Executive Committee.

Attempted Suicide.

Ben Benson, on Friday, became gloomy and despondent over the thought of the long term of penitentiary life before him, and borrowing a knife from a visitor at the jail, on the pretence of pealing a peach, he made an unsuccessful attempt to cut his own throat. The cut was made too far back to be very serious. In his excitement the prisoner inflicted a three inch gash on the side of his neck. He then threw the knife out of the window thinking he had accomplished his object in puting an end to his life. Upon examination his wound was found to be not very serious. It was dressed by Dr. J. J. Dawson, and it is expected the wound will soon heal. Some think that the prisoner is endeavoring to create the impression that he is insane.

Dr. J. C. Courtney has sold his place to Mr. W. G. Meriwether. It is rumored that Dr. Courtney will move to Florida. We sincerely hope the rumor is incorrect, for he is an excellent gentleman and citizen, and we would regret very much to lose him.

Quite a number of visiting ministers were in attendance upon the camp meeting.

Our circuit court should by all means be extended to a two weeks term. Dispatch of business requires it.

The local bar will ask the next Legislature through our representative to extend our circuit court to a two weeks term.

Read Mr. A. J. Brooks' advertisement and local. He is an enterprising and liberal merchant and deserves a liberal patronage.

Mr. S. E. Hirscher at 21 Market Street, Montgomery, has returned from New York with a magnificent stock of new music—vocal and instrumental.

The cadets of Clanton Academy have received their uniforms. They are very tasty in design and attract the attention of every one. Confederate grey is the color.

The restaurant at 105 Commerce Street, Montgomery, kept by Mr D. H. Lewis is a good stopping place for visitors to the city. The advertisement in this paper should be read.

A fire was discovered on Mr F. J. Davis' premises on Wednesday morning. It resulted in the burning of a small barn and a quantity of provender. It is not known how the fire started. It would be well to be on guard against fire this dry weather.

Mr. S. E. Hirscher, at 21 Market Street, Montgomery, besides being able to furnish anything in the way of new and beautiful music, has also in stock a magnificent line of musical instruments. He is agent in this State for the celebrated Kranich & Bach piano.

Mr. Richard Kemp has fattened twenty head of hogs this year on chufas and ground peas. He never feeds corn to his hogs. Mr. Kemp is a model farmer. He raises all of his meat and food supplies. He says that one acre in ground peas will fatten thoroughly three head of hogs. He raises ground-peas on land that is too poor to raise anything else, and says that when land is no account for other purposes it will then in good condition for raising ground peas.

ED. VIEW:—I wish to reply to a card that was published in your paper Aug. 28th. I notice that a couple of men deny the charge of voting for a negro to represent Autauga county. I do not know that either one of them did so; but one of them told me at my home that he did so. I always thought that he was a man of more stability than to deny a word of his when it came home to him. As to the other I only heard it as a rumor.

Fatal Difficulty.

At the camp ground on Monday evening, a difficulty occurred between Mr A. K. Evans and Mr. M. T. Hamrick, in which Mr. Evans was killed by a blow from a piece of plank. His skull was broken, and he died in about an hour after receiving the fatal blow. Mr. Hamrick was arrested and placed in jail. Mr. Hamrick's preliminary examination is set for Saturday morning at nine o'clock.

A Useful Invention.

Mr. W. Job. Reynolds, at Ternan's mill, has recently purchased the right to sell a most useful invention. It is a system of rendering steam engines 25 to 30 per cent stronger. It is an English patent. Mr. Reynolds will be glad to serve the saw mills of this county with this useful invention, and guarantees satisfaction, and all that he claims for the invention.

Thirty-five Years.

Ben Benson was tried on last Thursday in the circuit court on the charge of killing Morgan Glasscock near this place last Winter. The jury in the case returned a verdict of murder in the second degree and fixed the prisoner's sentence at thirty-five years in the penitentiary. Benson is now about thirty years old and he will hardly live out thirty-five years of convict life.

TO THE PEOPLE OF CHILTON AND ADJOINING COUNTIES!

I have now in store the finest and largest stock of goods of all descriptions ever brought to Chilton county, and propose to sell them lower than any other merchant in the county. I will pay the highest market price for your cotton, and give you the money for it. Come right along: tight times dictate prices, and it makes no difference if cotton is low, what you want is equally as cheap, so that should not keep you from marketing your cotton.

To those who owe me: Please come right along and settle. I need the money. I accommodated you last spring, now you can return the favor.

LUMBERMEN ORGANIZING.

A Vigorous Effort to Combine the Lumber Interests in this Section of the South.

Mobile Register.

The meeting of Alabama lumbermen at Birmingham Tuesday was attended by twelve of the leading manufacturers of the upper part of the State, namely, Mr. W. W. Wadsworth, Wadsworth; Capt. W. E. Cole, of Mountain Creek; Maj. L. J. Hand, of Jemison; Mr. D. W. Rodgers, of Talledega; Mr. J. O. Smith, of Tuskaloosa: Mr. T. M. Ternan, of Clanton, Mr. S. T. Brittle, of Verbena; Mr. W. M. Loftin, of Wadsworth; Mr. J. Morgan Smith, of Riverside; Mr. J. N. Crowder, of same place, Mr. J. H. Harrison, of Sexton, and Mr. A. C. Danner, of Mobile.

The object of the meeting was stated to be the fixing of grades of lumber and raising prices, and after some discussion upon these and kindred topics, the temporary organization was effected by the election of Mr. Rodgers, chairman, and Mr. Loftin, Secretary.

In taking the sense of the meeting, it was shown that some six years ago an association of lumbermen was formed and rules were adopted, which, as long as abided by, were productive of good results. The condition of affairs at present is such that the revival of the old association or the formation of a new one, is considered essential. Mr. Danner said he had thought a great deal upon the subject of the organization of a permanent association with membership throughout the South, but had failed to carry out his intentions regarding such an association owing to the demand such work would have made upon the limited time at his disposal. He had at the time sent out circulars to those who he thought would interest themselves in the matter, and had received very general assent to the proposition advanced. Such an effort if rightly directed now might meet with a speedy and hearty response.

This suggestion was commented upon by the other gentlemen present and, finally, by motion the chairman was authorized to appoint a committee of seven to send interrogatories to all the mill men in Alabama, Mississippi and Georgia, asking if they can meet in New Orleans in the winter, at a time to be designated by the President. The motion contemplates the sending of invitations to all mill men who ship at least a carload of lumber per day to the Northwestern market. The committee, on receiving its responses, is requested to report to the chairman what success has been met, and the chairman will then appoint a day for this general convention of lumbermen. Messrs. Brittle, Danner, Crowder, Hand, Wadsworth, Loftin and Cole were appointed to serve on this committee. On motion, the name of the chairman was added to the list. The meeting then adjourned.

LA MORT.

The Day is dead. See how his life-blood dyes
The soft cloud-pillows in the western skies.
What tho' a smile still gleamin his eyes?

I tell you he is dead! Why loiter here
Till Gloom unsightly prowls of death appears,
And the cool Night drops tears upon his bier?

Hey, let us go, while yet the skies are red,
Ere Darkness draws the curtains of his bed,
Our last look finds him beautiful, tho' dead.

* * * * * * * * *

Dear Love is dead; slain by his own delight,
What tho' his feverish cheek is strangely bright,
I tell you he lies dead in all his might.

Let us not wait till on his rigid face
There rests no lingering luster, and no trace
Of his surpassing beauty and young grace;

Ere 'round his stiffening frame, from head to foot,
Society shall fold her winding sheet,
While his still form, tho' dead, is fair and sweet.

Let us shake hands. There is no more to say.
We part with Love until the Judgment Day—
This is the end of dreams like ours alway.

ELLA WHEELER.

Mount Desert.

BY C. E. DAVIS.

"And so you leave Mount Desert and pleasure to-morrow, Miss Young? You have made the summer doubly pleasant to me—pleasant as I always find vacation time."

"It is very good of you to say so, Mr. Darley, and I'm sure you have made Mount Desert very pleasant to us. Indeed, my mother was saying only this morning how useful and nice to us you have been. But, you see, she must be getting back to New York now; there are the boys going away to school, and all that."

"Well, I suppose it is necessary. But you won't like leaving?"

"Why, of course it is. No, I shall be very sorry to leave; and yet I shall be glad for some things to get back. It will feel so much like home after all this traveling and seeing all these things."

"Yes, no doubt you will bless the first brick house and dull pavements you see in town; they give your eye such a sense of relief and quiet."

"You are going to stay on here some time with Mr. Paget, are you not? He tells me now you'd have left the hotel where you met us, you have got such pleasant rooms."

"No, I don't think I shall stay on here any longer after this week."

"Why, I thought you intended to stay right on into the fall, and he intended to read all the gossiping old historians, and you meant to hunt up every kind of fish that could possibly live in these cold Maine waters."

"So I did; but I'm not going to now. I'm going to leave. I'm tired to death of it."

"Why, just now you said it was always pleasant; and what will Mr. Paget do?"

"Oh, Paget! Paget! I suppose he'll come with me or else he won't. I used to think Mount Desert pleasant, but I don't now."

"Well, you are a changeable person."

"So would you be if—— But do you really think me a changeable person, Miss Young?"

"No, Mr. Darley, I don't think—at least I didn't think that you were?"

"Well, but what did you think about me? I think you thought something about me."

"Perhaps I did. One thinks something about everybody, you know; but perhaps I don't think it now."

"I suppose you thought something about Mr. Paget, too?"

"Oh, yes, I thought something about Mr. Paget, of course. I like him very much."

"But how differently did you think when you thought about Mr. Paget and myself?"

"That's a very difficult question. I—at least we—thought you very nice, too; but——"

"But—but what, Miss Young?"

"Oh, nothing, except that I thought so."

"But I want to ask you how differently you thought, and I want you to understand me, and not to look too serious."

"Why, you don't think I'm serious, do you?"

"Well, as a rule, you are not serious, certainly; you are delightfully gay. But there is a certain quality of seriousness about you; and you are always very serious when I want to say anything to you. Remember how serious you were that day when we looked at the old wharves over in Rockland?"

"Yes, but that was some time ago, and—— But let us talk of something else and be friends."

"But we are friends, are we not? Only——"

"I say, Darley, come along. Mrs. Young says she'd like to look inside the new hotel before we get into the carriage, though it does look like a meeting-house except for the tower."

"Oh, I don't care, for the hotel, thanks, and I believe, Miss Young, you would, would you not, prefer to finish your sketch of that yacht? It will be soon done now."

"Yes, perhaps, I should; that is, I think that I ought to finish it."

"All right, Paget: we'll join you in five minutes. I'd just like to sketch the coast in the distance myself; it looks so well just now with the sun on it."

"Well, don't be long coming down."

"Had you not better get your sketch-book out now they have gone, Mr. Darley, and begin the coast?"

"Oh, my sketch-book! Oh, I suppose I have forgotten it!"

"Here mine, here's a leaf from my book; and here's a pencil."

"Thanks; but I don't want to sketch at all."

"You are disagreeable, indeed!"

"I want to sit here and talk to you as I am at you are going away."

"Bother the coast."

"What, the coast that you used to rave about, with its grass mosses of rock and the white spray darting up in clouds against it? You used to say it reminded you of what—what did it remind you of?"

"I really don't know. But I wish you were not going away to-morrow. I don't know when I shall see you again, if I ever do.

"Why, mother asked you to come and see us, if you ever found yourself in New York."

"If I ever do! I suppose I should run over from Boston and you will ask me to dinner; and then you would show me your house, and, perhaps, your favorite seat in the library; and Mrs. Young would be very distant, and you would be very stiff and reserved, and unlike what you are at Mt. Desert."

"What a splendid picture, down to the easy-chair, even! And my good brother will look at you through his eyeglass, and offer you a cigar, and say queer fellow or good fellow of you, 'should think,' when you are gone. But you won't really leave Mt. Desert?"

"Yes, I shall, and knock about somewhere, spending my time as uselessly as I usually spend it. But do you truly expect me to come some day, Miss Young?"

"Yes; I shall be very much disappointed if you don't come. We have been such good friends, and mother likes you, and—and we have been such good friends, you know."

"Then I certainly shall try to come. And, perhaps—will you let me begin to talk again as I did that day at Rockland?"

"I don't know. But I can't sketch if you put your arm across my block, Mr. Darley. And I think it's quite finished now—I could finish it at home."

"Never mind finishing it; let us finish something else, which may remain unfinished forever if we don't do it now. Please look me in the eyes, and let me go on with what I said on the beach at Rockland a month ago. Only then you said it was very painful and sudden, and you had never dreamed of it. Have you ever done so since?"

"Mr. Darley, I think—but I hear Mr. Paget calling. We must go home."

"But may I not come home with you—I mean to New York, and further? Will you not trust me to find you a home?"

"Darley, Darley, where are you?"

"Your eyes look yes, and your lips say 'Yes.' Thank you, thank you; it shall be indeed a home."

"Darley, I say, didn't you hear me? What a long five minutes your sketch takes! It's getting late, and Mrs. Young is in the carriage. But—I hope nothing is the matter, Miss Young?"

"No; nothing at all, thank you."

"No, nothing is the matter, Paget, and I'm sorry for being so late. But, you see, Miss Young and I have settled—I mean we have arranged—to leave Mount Desert and go home—to make a home, you understand." — Domestic Monthly.

SUNK IN BOSTON HARBOR.

The Rose Standish Sunk by a Collision—Her Passengers are Saved.

The steamer Rose Standish, of the Boston and Hingham Company, plying between Boston, Downer Landing, and Hingham, was sunk in the harbor within sight of the wharf from which she had sailed at 5:15 p. m. on Thursday. The harbor was full of sailing craft, and Capt. Ingraham says he was feeling his way among the boats to get into clear water, and was just rounding the stern of a large schooner when he descried the Commercial Company's tug Wesley A. Gove bearing down upon him. There was no time, the Captain said, to even blow his whistle before the propeller was upon him. The Standish was struck a foot abaft of the forward port gangway, the prow of the tug forcing its way clear through the deck and planking into the engine room, scattering the lighted coals in every direction, igniting all the woodwork in the vicinity and, as an officer of the boat said, "She would have burned up if she hadn't sunk so quickly."

There were 101 passengers on board, and for a time there was great excitement among them. The instant Capt. Ingraham saw that his vessel must sink he blew a distress signal on his steam whistle. This called five tugs and the steamer William Harrison from the adjacent wharves to the assistance of the disabled steamer, and so excellent was the discipline of the crew of the Standish, and the ability of the aiding boats, that every passenger was taken from the sinking steamer without even "getting their feet wet." Considering that the Standish sank within six minutes after she was struck, the safe and speedy removal of the passengers was remarkable. During the panic among the passengers many women fainted. All on board lost their wardrobes, and they are now in their rooms in the sunken vessel. She lies canted on the starboard side, her smokestack, pilot house, and a few feet of her hurricane deck out of water, and within 150 yards of the East Boston shore, directly in the track of the harbor vessels wharfing above Rowe's Wharf. Lights have been placed upon all points above water.

The Rose Standish was built in Brooklyn (N. Y.) in 1863 and thoroughly rebuilt in 1877 at an expense of nearly $60,000. She is 302.93 tons measurement and is licensed to carry 1,000 passengers.

"So now think John is becoming a great man in the city?" said a farmer, speaking of his absent son to a companion of the youth. "Great man! I should say so. Why there's he's a barkeeper in the city hardly, that he don't call by his first name."

To be happy the passion must be cheerful and gay, and gloomy and malevolent passions must be banished from the heart.

LIFE IN AN INDIAN CAMP.

THE STORY OF GEN. CANBY'S BRAVE DEATH UNDER A FLAG OF TRUCE.

The Story Told, as it was Never Understood Before—Canby might Easily have been Saved.

Dr. T. T. Cabaniss, in the Astorian of Oregon, retells the story of the treachery of the Modocs in the lava beds: "Gen. Canby and Dr. Thomas led the party on foot and Dyar and Meacham followed on horseback, though the nature of the ground was such that one could make better time on foot over the rocks than on a horse. The distance from General Canby's tent to the council tent was 900 yards and the latter was hidden from us (except the signal officer) by a fall-off in the lava bed. The General was about fifty yards from the place where it stood (at the end of our camp next to the Indians), and Dr. Thomas behind. I shall never forget those two men as they looked that day, marching into the jaws of death—Canby with his tall figure, dressed in a new military coat, and Thomas in a suit of Scotch gray. At this moment Meacham turned his horse from the trail and rode up to me. Said he, 'Dr. Cabaniss, do you think there is danger under the arrangement we have made?' 'What is the arrangement?' I asked. 'There are to be five unarmed Indians and five of us.' 'Under that arrangement,' I replied, 'there is no danger; but Meacham, if you are suspicious of these Indians, remain here and let me go and see them.' He turned in his saddle, and seeing that General Canby and Dr. Thomas had gotten some distance in advance, without replying, followed them. Subsequent events proved that the Modocs intended to kill Colonel Mason as well as Canby, Gillem and others.

"After the commissioners had been with them some time, and at the moment that Canby was making them laugh, while smoking cigars, an Indian came in sight of Mason's camp, a mile and a half from the council tent, and waved a white flag. General Canby had told them to do this if they wanted to see the whites. Lieutenant Sherwood was officer of the day, and went to meet this Indian, accompanied by Lieutenant Boyle. When within a few yards of this man Sherwood asked him what he wanted. 'Nothing!' was the answer. As the officer turned several Indians rose from the rocks and commenced firing at him and Boyle. The first shot was through his thigh, breaking the bone, from which wound he died several days afterward. Boyle escaped. Sherwood took shelter behind a rock, and the man who was on picket several hundred yards away opened fire on the Indians and kept them from advancing on Sherwood. The troops turned out and the Modocs retreated to their camp.

"Almost immediately after this occurrence Lieutenant Moore, the signal officer in Mason's camp, telegraphed to General Gillem: 'The Indians have fired on this camp, killing Sherwood and Boyle!' Upon receipt of this message, General Gillem sent his adjutant, Lieutenant Rockwell, for me, and desired my presence. Upon reaching his tent Gillem said: 'Dr. Cabaniss, will you take a message to General Canby?' 'Yes, sir.' 'I have selected you out of this entire command, but I do not want you to go under any misapprehension.' I answered that I would go to the rescue of General Canby if he was in danger from the Modocs. 'I will write the message,' said he, 'because if you carry a verbal message, "Bogus" will tell the other Indians.' As he handed me the message, telling of the death of Sherwood, the officer at the signal station called out, 'They are firing at the council tent!' The men turned out immediately, and some of them under Sergeant Wosten, an ex-Confederate soldier of K Company of cavalry, started without awaiting the orders of the officers.

"Meacham has told what followed, and I will merely correct a few mistakes which he makes. Dr. Thomas was shot with a pistol by 'Boston,' and then through the front part of the head with a ball from a carbine. General Canby from the spot where he sat when shot, and Thomas was about eighty yards in another direction.

"Had I gone to these Indians first, I would have counted eight instead of five, and I would have seen that they were armed, as Dyar did when he got to the ground. I would have made Jack believe that Canby was delayed in camp and then walked away. This could have been done with perfect safety, as they were after larger game, and knew that to shoot me would defeat their plans, and General Canby and Dr. Thomas Canby had a wound from a pistol-ball under the left eye, and one from a pistol-ball in the side of the head, above the left ear; without passing through, and a stab with a narrow-bladed knife under the right ear. Canby was thirty-five would be living to-day. Had I reached the General before the firing commenced, the whole plan of the Indians would have been changed, and being armed, standing by Dyar's horse, I would have killed Jack and possibly have saved the General's life. What my fate would have been, of course, is not known, but I believe that one cool and courageous white man, under such circumstances, can whip that number of Indians, especially when he had Meacham, Dyar, and others to divert their attention. At least the risk would justify one in the hope of saving such a man as General Canby."

A THIAL THEF.—During the Tenth century persons accused of robbery were put to trial by a piece of barley bread, on which the mass had been said, and if they could not swallow it they were declared guilty. Sometimes a slice of cheese was added to the bread. The bread was to be of unleavened barley, and the cheese made of ewe's milk in the month of May.

THE BOOK OF HORROR.

A True History of Joe Smith's Remarkable Piece of Imagery.

[From the St. Louis Spectator.]

How many people know anything about the origin of the Mormon religion or, rather, of the Book of Mormon, which is its authority? I know precious little about it until this week, when I accidently fell in with Mr. Clark Braden, who has recently given the subject a most searching investigation. His story shows of what stuff a religion may be made. The Mormons number nearly 300,000. They are divided in many sects, but the principal are the polygamous Brighamites in Utah and the non-polygamous Josephites scattered in various places. The story may be given in a few words. The Book of Mormon was written by an old, broken-down Presbyterian clergyman named Solomon Spaulding. Spaulding was born in Connecticut in 1761. He graduated at Dartmouth College and settled as Minister for a Congregational church. He made a bad failure at preaching, and went into business with his brother in New York State, did not succeed, and started an iron foundry in a town in Northern Ohio. He soon failed in that venture and became very much discouraged. His wife supported the family by taking boarders and he spent his time in writing, though what did not then appear. The family moved to Pittsburg, when he rewrote his book, adding a second part. He afterward rewrote the entire book, adding a third part. This is the origin of the manuscript.

Now, what became of it? Spaulding made arrangements to have it printed in Pittsburg. After a part of it had been set up the whole manuscript was stolen by a tanner named Sidney Rigdon, who was in the habit of loafing around the printing office. Rigdon kept it concealed for some years, until he fell in with Joseph Smith, who evolved the plan of producing it. Smith belonged to a not very reputable family living near Palmyra, N. Y. They lived in a house and supported themselves by hunting and and fishing and other means suspected to be more questionable. Joseph, one day, found a remarkably clear crystal, shaped much like a child's foot, and he declared it was a "peep-stone," in which he could read the future and discover stolen goods, strayed cattle, etc., and on several occasions was so successful in predicting the locality of goods and cattle that he soon came to have considerable reputation. He then extended his field of operations by divining where treasures were buried, and under his directions a great many diggings were made, unsuccessfully, however. These diggings extended over a large area, some fifty miles or more, around Palmyra, and some of them may be seen now. He fell in with Sidney Rigdon, who told him of the manuscript. Smith soon devised a scheme for producing it under proper surroundings. The alleged book of copper plates was found under divine guidance, on which characters of reformed Egyptian were graven. The book was accompanied by a pair of spectacles of wondrous power, which enabled Smith to translate the remarkable characters. This he did from behind a screen, while an amanuensis took down his words. The Book of Mormon was printed in 1830 at Palmyra, N. Y., a farmer, Martin Harris, putting up the cash to pay the printer. Thus Solomon Spaulding's manuscript found its way into print with such additions and alterations as Smith chose to make for his own benefit.

A Photographer's Story.

"An old man came in at 11 a. m. He was right from the country; had mud on his boots, and all the other testimony. He was goin' west to his 'darters,' and wanted a picture to take with him, you know. I knew all about it, and soon had him in the chair, the iron clamps behind his ears and the camera 'gun' aimed at his gray head. He was quite nervous about something, and asked me to wait. 'I want my picture drawed off to look like this,' he said, as he pulled a a tintype of a young man from his pocket. 'The same pose like, you know,' he said, as he told me that it was his son, who had been killed at Stone River. 'He was a dear, good boy, he was,' said the old man, with a weak voice and a sigh, 'and I'll soon be with him.'

"I got him in position while he still held in his hand the dead boy's picture. I went through the usual ceremony, telling him, 'All ready now, right still;' and as I took the cloth from the table, turned my back to prevent any embarrassment. In thirty seconds I said, 'That will do.' He never moved. 'You may rest now,' I said; but he sat still and held the precious tintype as if wrapt in thought. Thinking he was deaf, I touched him on the shoulder. Still he did not move, and I noticed a fixed state in his eyes. He was dead. He had died in the chair, and I had the negative of a dying man. Of course I got help and sent word to his friends. The doctors said he died of heart disease. I developed the picture, and started as I saw the face of a dead man look at me from the collodion coating. It was a nervous day for me I can tell you, and I have always been careful with old people."—Cincinnati Times-Star.

"You know I used to be under the weather all the time and gave up expecting to be any better. The doctor said I had consumption. I was terribly weak, had night-sweats, cough, no appetite, and lost flesh. I saw Dr. Pierce's 'Golden Medical Discovery' advertised, and thought it would do no harm if it did no good. It has cured me. I am a new man because I am a well one."

WHEN the Mason & Hamlin Company announced the accomplishment of a great improvement in Upright Pianos, which they would soon give to the public, much was expected, because of the vast improvements which had been effected by them in reed instruments, and the acknowledged superexcellence of their organs. These expectations are fully justified by the pianos which they are producing, which have extraordinary purity and refinement of tone. Every mechanic will see that the peculiarities of their construction must add greatly to their durability and especially their capacity to keep in good tune.

This company have as great a future in their pianos as they are already realizing in their organs, which are confessedly unequalled among such instruments.—Boston Traveler.

"No Physic, Sir, in Mine!"

A good story comes from a boys' boarding-school in "Jersey." The diet was monotonous and constipating, and the learned Principal decided to introduce some old-style physic in the apple-sauce, and await the happy results. One bright lad, the smartest in school discovered the secret mine in his sauce, and pushing back his plate, shouted to the pedagogue: "No physic, sir, in mine. My dad told me to use nuthin' but Dr. Pierce's 'Pleasant Purgative Pellets,' and they are doing their duty like a charm!" They are anti-bilious, and purely vegetable.

THE BLOSSOMED BUD.

BY WILL CARLETON.

'Twas a babe—a three-month old—
That Death had come to see:
It was white and still and cold
As any babe could be.
But its features softly traced
A life that God had planned:
Some one dreaming this had placed
A rose-bud in its hand.

Deeply wept the parents when
That spirit fluttered free;
They were sad and wretched then,
As parents oft must be.
Each the other's picture borne
Saw in the fleeting face.
When that heart from theirs was torn,
It left so large a place.

But when last in its repose
They kissed it mournfully,
That small bud had grown a rose,
As sweet as rose could be.
With its soft breath it perfumed
The sad and solemn hour;
And it smiled and glowed and bloomed,
A grand and perfect flower.

Then those hearts grew strangely light,
And bade their doubtings flee;
They were full of hopes as bright
As stricken ones could be.
And the pastor gently said,
"This tells to our dim eyes,
That your darling is not dead,
But blooms in Paradise."

DYING FOR HIS MASTER.

A SHEPHERD DOG'S ENCOUNTER WITH A RATTLESNAKE.

"My name is Thomas Wilman, and I live in Philadelphia, where my son Harry is a prominent business man. Thirty-one years ago I married, in Great Barrington, Mass., as pretty a girl as that village (famous for its pretty girls) ever sheltered. She had been well brought up, but had no fortune. I had $1,500 which I had made by running a sawmill. We were young and had the world before us, and we concluded to go West. Going West in those days didn't mean, as it seems to now, going beyond the Mississippi. Going into 'York State' was going West then. I had a cousin in Cattaraugus, a little village on the Erie Railway, 30 miles east of Dunkirk, and we concluded to go there.

It was late in August when we reached Cattaraugus. My cousin gave us a hearty welcome, and I set about looking for a spot to build. Cattaraugus is a curious sort of a place. The village is surrounded by hills, and the wonder to me is that it doesn't slide down into the washbowl-like valley on the side of which it is built. A little creek runs through the village, and a mile to the west finds itself in a deep, narrow valley, with almost perpendicular sides, 100 feet high. This valley is called Skinner Hollow, and is one of the most picturesque spots on the Erie Road. I went down into the hollow prospecting. The sides, where they were not too steep, were covered with a heavy growth of first-class pine, and for miles around the hills were thick with the same timber. I saw there was money in a sawmill right down in that hollow, and I built one on the stream, which I could see was a good-sized creek most of the year. It is one of the branches of Cattaraughs Creek, which empties into Lake Erie 30 miles west of Buffalo.

"I built my mill there, and close to it a little house, so close, in fact, that the two joined. I took Katie, that is my wife, down there, and we began housekeeping. That was well into the winter, and I began logging at once. I hired a gang of men to help me, raised money by contracting my lumber ahead, and started in. We cut logs on the hills close to the mill, rigged up slides, and ran them down to the logway. I tell you it was music to me when the saw ripped into the first log and a clean-cut slab dropped away from the teeth. We had a little jollification. That was the first log ever cut in Skinner Hollow, and people drove miles to see it. Business was good. There was lots of snow, which made it easy work getting logs to the mill and drawing the lumber out to the village, besides giving me all the water I wanted. In fact water was running over the tail of my flume every hour from the time I turned it into the race till the middle of July. Then a dry spell came on, and I had to shut down for two or three hours every day to let my race fill up.

"But I didn't mind that. I had had a tip-top season and had made money. I had logs enough at my door to keep me busy for a year, and I knew where there were plenty more when those ran out. And, besides, I had two to look after instead of one. You wouldn't think if you'd see Harry, with all his refined ways and education, that the first music he ever heard was a saw tearing through a pine knot. But it's so. He was a pioneer's son and knocked around a sawmill till he was into his teens. Well, when business was slow I worked around the house, fixing up things here and there for Katie, so as to make her more comfortable. She couldn't have been more contented. She used to think that sawmill was just about the pleasantest place in the country. Hour after hour she'd stay out there with me, and we'd keep up the conversation while the log was running back and stop when it went up to the saw. Dear me! Dear me! Why, I can see her as she used to look in those days in that little sawmill just as plainly as if I stood there with her to-day. She used to jump on the log and ride up pretty close to the saw and then, just as I would get scared and jump to drag her away, off she'd go. Nobody was ever happier than we were, and we have never been as happy since, though we've been pretty happy and are yet."

The yellow sunlight flickered into the room where the two sat, and the wine looked like blood as the dancing rays shone through it. The old man was lost in happy reverie, and the young man ventured to remind him that there was a snake story promised.

"True," said the old man, starting, "I'm just coming to that. I lost myself thinking of those old days. There was snakes then, and we had killed them. Rattlers used to come out on the ledges of rocks and lay in the hot sun. One or two had come around the mill, and I had shot one in our door yard. But we thought nothing of that. People living in the woods or in wild places get used to things that would fill them with horror in a settled country. We expected to find snakes, and as long as they kept their distance or gave us a chance to shoot them when they got too near we didn't mind them.

"As I told you, I fixed up things around the house during slack time. One of the bits of furniture I knocked together was a bedstead. It was more like a broad lounge than a bedstead, for it had neither head nor footboard. One end was raised a little like a couch, and that was the head. We had some bearskins and blankets to sleep on, and more blankets to cover us. It was a big improvement on the floor where we had been sleeping, and after a hard day's work handling logs I used to think it about as comfortable a spot as I knew.

"Well, it got along into the fall and we began to have chilly nights. The equinoctial gave us a big rain, and for a fortnight I had all the water I could use. Then it got dry again. One afternoon, after several days of threatening weather, it began to rain. Hour after hour the rain came down till about 9 o'clock in the evening, when it suddenly cleared off and turned cold. It was late in October and we kept a fire burning on the hearth nights, more for the baby's sake than for our own. Our bed was parallel with the fireplace and stood out near the middle of the room. We had an English shepherd dog named Leo, which we took with us from Massachusetts. He was a black and white beauty, and my wife, who had raised him, thought about as much of him as she did of the baby or me—at least, I used to tell her so. The dog was fond of me and I made a great pet of him. He was a noble fellow, and all he wanted was for me to whistle just once and he'd come. We let him sleep in the room at the foot of the bed. Sometimes in the morning I'd wake up before my wife and I'd whistle just once to the dog. Up he'd come over the foot of the bed and wake Katie by licking her face.

"That night we were just going to bed when it turned cold. I threw an extra pine knot on the fire and went to the door and looked out. I shall never forget that look, for it was the last time I ever stood there and saw stars above Skinner Hollow. I closed the door and went to bed and soon fell asleep. I slept on the side of the bed nearest the hearth, my wife slept on the further side and the baby lay between us. For some reason I didn't sleep long, and when I waked up I couldn't get to sleep again. Finally I got out of bed and threw another knot on the fire. Leo was stretched out on the floor with his nose between his paws. He eyed me sleepily as I walked around the room and gave me a loving look as I stooped down and patted his head. I went back to bed and fell into an uneasy sleep. All at once I wakened with a start. It must have been past midnight. I seemed to be fully awake the moment I opened my eyes, and such a sight as they rested on God grant they may never see again. I was lying on my left side facing my wife, who was lying on her right side. The baby lay on its back between us. As I opened my eyes a dark object glided down from off the baby, and just then the knot burst into flames and flooded the room with light. A rattlesnake, fully five feet long, had slipped down from between my wife and myself where it had been stretched out presumably to get warm, and, startled no doubt by some movement I had made in waking, had thrown itself into a coil on the bed at the baby's feet and just opposite my knees.

"Somebody asks if life is worth living. I think it is as a general thing, but if life had many such moments as that I should say emphatically that death was preferable. For a moment I lost my head. I did not move, fortunately, but I seemed to drift entirely out of all consciousness. For a moment only this lasted. Then my senses came back to me, and I felt that from the reaction I would probably tremble from head to foot. How I ever managed to keep my body rigid I don't know, but by an awful effort I did. I knew that to stir was death, perhaps for myself, perhaps for my boy, perhaps—my God, the thought was agony—for my wife. Outside I could hear the rain dripping from the eaves, and I could detect the sound of water running to waste over the flume. To-morrow, I thought, I'll have plenty of water again. To-morrow! Would I ever see to-morrow again? And if I did would I not meet it alone? In spite of all I could do a shudder ran through my body.

"The snake felt it and raised its head. I could see its eyes glisten and dance in the firelight, and the bright rays glanced over the undulating coils. I could see that the snake was irritated, and I knew that it was liable to spring at any moment. Who would it strike? Either of us was within easy distance. It seemed to me that I could see the beginning of the muscular contraction which would precede the spring.

"All this, of course, passed in a fraction of the time I have occupied in telling it. My wife and boy slept on. I prayed that they might not move, for if they did I felt the snake would throw itself forward. I moved my head slightly. The snake's head again arose, and for the first time it sounded its rattle. Instantly my wife opened her eyes, and some way they rested on the snake. I could see that every vestige of color had left her face, but she did not move a muscle. Then her eyes slowly left the snake and came up to mine.

"Looking back over the nearly thirty years which have elapsed since then I can see the look in her eyes yet. We had sometimes talked about meeting death together. Now it lay between us and in more horrible form than we had ever dreamed of. Yet the look of perfect confidence in me which my wife's eyes almost spoke was something a man does not see more than once in a lifetime. That look seemed to say, for baby's sake, and like a flash I became as cool as I am at this moment. I could not speak but my wife understood that she must keep perfectly quiet and jump. When the time came, slowly and with infinite care I raised my head till I could look down the bed to the floor beyond. My wife's eyes followed mine, and we both saw the dog. The hideous eyes of the snake swayed to and fro, and I knew that what was done must be done quickly. I looked at my wife and she realized my plan. Her eyes filled with tears but gave consent. With a prayer for help I moistened my lips and gave one short, sharp whistle. The snake, I think, didn't know what to make of it, but the dog, Leo, did. As quick almost as thought he sprang to his feet and bounded on the bed. To this day I've never been able to understand why the snake did not strike when the dog moved, but it did not. As the dog's body rose in the air my wife caught hold of the baby's garments and rolled out on Leo. I rolled out on my side, grasped my rifle, which stood at the head of the bed, and turned. The dog and the snake were rolling together on the bed. I caught sight of the snake's head and fired, and the reptile was past doing any harm. The dog staggered off the bed to the floor, shivered, moaned once or twice, looked from my wife to myself with more love than I ever saw before or since in any animal's eyes and died.

"At daybreak the next morning we buried the dog and started for the village. I sold my mill and house to a man who was visiting my cousin, and before sunset we were on our way to Massachusetts. I built another mill in the East, and we prospered and grew rich. Other children came to make our home happy, and there are grandchildren now. We have enjoyed life, and enjoy it now. But I tell you, young man, that if poverty stood on one hand and even a glimpse of Skinner Hollow on the other, we would take poverty cheerfully and think we had made a good bargain."

A Land for Tramps.

A Halifax letter to the Boston Traveler says: The hospitality of the people of this district is a strange contrast to that which goes by the name among their city cousins. Here is an instance of it. Soon after entering this settled portion of the country we come in sight of a little dwelling by the roadside. The door is wide open, and we can see as we approach that the table is invitingly set for supper. As we are about passing along a woman appears at the door, and after a glance at us utters a kindly "Come in." It is a long way to our destination yet, and as the bracing air has given us a somewhat elephantine appetite, we of course take advantage of the offer. According to the rules of local etiquette, however, there is no necessity of waiting for an invitation, but when you are passing a house at meal time; you must walk right in and seat yourself at the table. It makes no difference if you are a perfect stranger, black, white, or copper colored. No honest stranger need fear to starve while travelling through this part of the country.

THE FRANKLIN FUND.—Benjamin Franklin left $5,000 to Boston to be loaned in small sums to young married mechanics under 25 who had served an apprenticeship, had good character and could give bonds for the repayment of the money in annual installments. The changed condition of mechanics, the decay of the apprentice system and other causes have made the bequest of no value to those for whom it was intended under the rules Franklin laid down. The fund now amounts to more than $300,000, and is increasing at the rate of $10,000 a year.

THE GREELY SURVIVORS.

THEIR PHYSICAL CONDITION WHEN RESCUED.

Showing How the Rations were Divided—Their Method of Living—How Lieutenant Greely Improved After Rescue.

The official report of Edward H. Green, M. D., surgeon of the steamship Thetis, of the Greely relief squadron, on the condition of the survivors of the Greely party when found at their camp on Smith's Sound, and their subsequent treatment, is published in the Medical News. In the report Dr. Green says: On Sept. 29, 1883, the party landed at Baird Inlet, and all were reported as well. On Oct. 25 they moved to a point between high ridges of mountains which screened them from northerly and southerly winds, and established a winter camp. The house which they constructed was 25 by 17 feet, and 4 feet in height, making a cubic air space of only 1,700 feet—a cubic air allowance of only 70 feet for each of the 25 men. It was in this hut, into which all could barely squeeze themselves at one time, that the explorers were overcome with asphyxia, and nearly lost their lives on March 24, 1884. The after effects of this mishap remained a long time, and greatly weakened many of the party. The water supply was obtained from an artificial lake 200 yards to the south of the hut by melting ice, which gave brackish water all the time. For nine months the party had no artificial warmth and lived in a temperature of from 5 to 10 degrees below zero for the winter. It was decided that the nearer they could approach a state of hibernating the better were their chances for getting through. So only the cooks and hunters exerted themselves to any extent, and were given double rations. The rest occupied their sleeping bags and slept from 16 to 18 hours out of every 24.

On Nov. 1, 1883, says Dr. Green, Lieut. Greely took an account of the stock of provisions. They divided up the rations so as to last until March 1, providing that a ten days' supply would be left at the end of that time. This gave to each man the following daily allowances: Meat and blubber, 4.33 ounces; bread and dog biscuit, 6.5 ounces; canned vegetables and rice, 1.4 ounces; butter and lard, .75 ounce; soup and beef extract, .90 ounce; berries, pickles, raisins, and milk, 1 ounce—a total daily allowance for the four months of 14.88. In addition the following game was added to the stores: Two seals, yielding 120 pounds of meat; 1 bear, yielding 300 pounds of meat; 8 foxes (4 pounds each), and 60 dovekies, small birds, weighing about 1 pound each. All the party were alive on March 1 except Sergt Cross, who died in January of scurvy, the only case of pronounced scurvy that developed. On March 1 the rations were reduced to the following allowance: Meat, 8.6 ounces; bread and dog biscuit, 3.2 ounces. Shrimp were now being caught, and from 1 to 3 ounces of these a day were added to the ration. On May 12 the last of the regular rations was gone. Shrimps, reindeer, moss, and the sealskin linings of the sleeping bags were boiled. Black lichen was also used, though Dr. Pavy advised against it. Dr. Green says:

"There seemed to be but little acute suffering from the lack of food. It was only after the introduction of food into the stomach that the craving became great. For days they went without food without actually suffering. The deaths seemed to take place finally from heart trouble (hydrops pericardii). The feet and face became œdematous; for a day or so they would complain of pains over the heart; have a spasm of pain over the præcordia; a slight general convulsion, and all would be over. Their chief suffering during the winter was from constipation."

Dr. Green confines himself particularly to the case of Lieut. Greely and does not even mention the condition of the others, except the condition of Connell when found. He fainted on being carried into the wardroom, and vomited. After being placed in a berth Lieutenant Greely was given a teaspoonful of raw, fresh meat, minced. His clothes were then cut off and flannels substituted.

The condition of Lieut. Greely is described daily as he improved. The next day after his removal to the Thetis he was allowed to have some home letters read. On the fifth day he sat up in bed, and just a week after the rescue was dressed and allowed to walk a little. He was given food at five stated intervals each day. He gained 9½ pounds the first week, 15 the second, 8 the third, 7 the fourth, 5½ the fifth, and 4 pounds the sixth week—bringing his weight to 169 pounds when he landed at Portsmouth. At St. John's Dr. Green reported only two men in good physical condition—Long and Fredericks. Sergt. Brainerd was reported in fair condition and the others weak.

DIMAL.—A Chinese orchestra rehearses daily on Mott street, New York, preliminary to giving a series of concerts in neighboring cities. A remarkable instrument is the trumpet. It is of Tartar origin, and produces a noise like a bagpipe, but much louder. The instruments are described as "dismal din" to those who have heard them.

THE FIGHT AT LANG-SON.

How the French Retreated, Leaving all but Their Ammunition.

The following is an extract from a private letter from Tonquin relative to the recent fighting at Lang-son: "I have now details that I have received from several officers who took part in the fight. The column sent to Lang-son was conducting a convoy of forty-five days' rations. At the passage of the river Captain Lecomte, a topographical officer, sent a reconnoisance with an infantry company. After having crossed the stream unsuspicious of danger he found himself face to face with the Chinese, who received him with a murderous musketry fire. He drove back the enemy and gave time for the column to pass the river.

"The Chinese sent a flag of truce from their general stating that they wanted five days to evacuate the country and Lang-son. Colonel Dugenne answered that, though in spite of the treaty with France they had attacked the French troops, he had orders to go to Lang-son and he would go. He advised them to retire before his troops. His advice was accepted. The column set forward in the midst of rocks, shrubs and bushes. Hardly had the troops entered the pass when from every direction fire flashed forth on the devoted fellows. The Chinese, who were hidden, fired volley after volley from every side. Seven officers were killed and wounded. More than one hundred men fell.

"At last, after two hours' heroic fighting, the French were obliged to retreat, abandoning everything with the exception of their ammunition and medical stores. The dead were left in possession of the enemy; but the wounded, through the heroic action of Captain Laperrine and his African chasseurs, were borne off safely. At last the French got out of the pass, and retired to a small elevation, where defensive works were thrown up. All night long a fire like hail fell upon them, killing and wounding many. Next day the troops fought all day long, the Chinese barring the road to the river. A company of the African battalion made the passage, and the troops were able to pass. Help arrived. Companies of tirailleurs left Bacninh and re-opened the combat.

"The tirailleurs captured in a bayonet charge the fortifications erected by the Chinese." Then follows a short account of an act of bravery for which it is expected the Cross of the Legion of Honor will be granted. While a chasseur was bearing a wounded doctor off the field a stray mule knocked against him as he was crossing a bridge and the doctor fell into the river. Twelve Chinamen immediately left their cover in order to capture the doctor. The chasseur, however, jumped into the river and rescued him. One of his shoulders was dislocated by a ball from a Chinaman's rifle, but he supported the doctor with the other arm till help speedily arriving they were both rescued.

A Journey to the Sun.

As to the distance of 93,000,000 miles, a cannon ball would travel it in about fifteen years. It may help us to remember that at the speed attained by the limited express on our railroads, a train which had left the sun for the earth when the Mayflower sailed from Delfhaven with the Pilgrim Fathers, and which ran at that rate day and night, would in 1884 still be a journey of some years away from its terrestrial station. The fare, at the customary rates, it may be remarked, would be rather over $2,500,000, so that it is clear that we should need both money and leisure for the journey. Perhaps the most striking illustration of the sun's distance is given by expressing it in terms of what the physiologists would call velocity of nerve transmission. It has been found that sensation is not absolutely instantaneous, but that it occupies a very minute time in traveling along the nerves; so that if a child puts its finger into the candle, there is a certain, inconceivably small space of time, say the one-hundredth of a second, before he feels the heat. In case, then, a child's arm were long enough to touch the sun, it can be calculated from this known rate of transmission that the infant would have to live to be a man of over a hundred before it knew that its fingers were burned.—September Century.

Diseased Cattle Killed.

The first slaughter of animals, under an act of the last General Assembly "to suppress and prevent the spread of pleuro-pneumonia among cattle," was made at Elmhurst, Ill., by the State Veterinarian, Dr. Pearen. A Justice of the Peace signed the papers condemning the diseased cattle and appointed three disinterested persons to appraise them. Ten condemned animals were appraised at $2,000. Some of them were shot with a pistol and the others knocked in the head with an axe. Several veterinary surgeons made an examination of the bodies, and the lungs of six of the ten animals contained what was announced to be evidence of pleuro-pneumonia in its worst form. Mr. Boyd says he was satisfied that the animals must be slaughtered, but that the appraisement would not come visible $40,000 of his own, as all were insured with responsible companies.

THE VIRGINIA OYSTERS.

Something About a Lively Elizabeth River Industry.

This country here is the land of the oyster, and millions of bushels are raised yearly, writes a correspondent from Fortress Monroe, Va. They grow in the salt water at the mouth of the Elizabeth River, and naturally fasten themselves to the rocky parts of its bed. During the season the river swarms with boats fishing for them. They are caught by a kind of a rake or tongs which the oyster catcher thrusts down, catches hold of them and pulls them up into his boat. The business of catching them is done by the colored population, and fish and oysters form the staple diet of the negroes of this region. It is a good business, too, this catching of oysters, and many of the oysterers make good wages. A good catch is always saleable, and the river is free to all. After the men have caught a boatload, they bring them to the oyster packers and sell them. I visited the largest of these establishments here, and watched their preparation for the northern market. A scow containing about 500 tons of oysters in the shell, all of them dirty and slimy, piled up like a big lot of stones on its floor, had just come in. These were unloaded by means of a derrick and a bushel tub with an iron handle. The oysters were shovelled, still dripping, into this tub, and after landing were wheeled into a long, low shed. Each tub was worth thirty-five cents, and they were counted as they were unloaded. Stepping inside the shed, I saw two rows of narrow stalls with a sort of manger in their front ends. Each of these was filled with a big colored oyster shucker. The oysters were emptied into the mangers and these men, with a small hammer and a short-bladed knife, opened them, took out the oysters and threw them into a bucket the size of a common wooden pail. First they would lift up the oyster shell, then break off its end with the hammer, then inject the knife into the broken place and pry it open. They worked very fast, and as they did so their queer Southern songs mingled with the short hammering of the breaking shells. I ate a few of the oysters just as they were opened, and found them to possess a delicious flavor, which I have never found in the oysters of the North.

When a shucker has filled his bucket he hands it over to the washer, and this man empties it into a large vat of water, where the oysters are washed and drained of their liquor before being sent away. The shuckers sort them as they open them, and put the little ones into one pail, the medium ones into another, and the big ones into a third. They are paid twenty cents a bucket, and sometimes they make as much as $3 a day. Many of them save their money, and I find here the same report I found on the peninsula, namely, that the colored people of the South are doing well, and that many of them are acquiring property. After the oysters are washed, they are packed in tubs and shipped. When packed, there is no liquor in them, and I am told that oyster sellers in the North often water their oysters before selling.

The Oyster Season.

WHAT AN OYSTERMAN SAYS ABOUT ITS BRIGHT PROSPECTS.

"With what hope do you look forward to the coming oyster season," asked a reporter of a dealer and planter.

"We will have one of the most prosperous seasons in years. There has been no drum fish to kill the oysters, either in Prince's Bay, Great South Bay or Long Island Sound. The oyster business is increasing very rapidly. The season will begin on September 1. The story that the letter "r" must be in the month in which only good oysters are eaten is all nonsense. The oysters are really much sweeter and better in May than any other time of the year. Of course there are certain times of the year when the oysters are growing, then, of course, they are not so good. Still, there is no danger of eating them at any time of the year. The oyster business in New York city began in the year 1805, the oyster market on the east side was then at the foot of Coenties slip. It was removed in 1845 to Catharine street, and then again in 1863 to the foot of Broome street. The oyster market on the north side of the city was started in 1845 at the foot of Spring street. For the convenience of the public the oystermen along the North River front are clustered in the space from West Tenth to West Eleventh streets. You can get any kind of oysters you want. The amount of capital invested in the oyster business in this city alone is $20,000,000 and there are 16,000 men employed in the wholesale trade alone. The consumption in New York city daily is 25,000 bushels. Ten years ago we used to ship to Europe about ten barrels a day, and we had hard work to get the people on the other side to buy them. To-day we send over 4,000 barrels a week. The mud, starfish and muscles, who are sworn enemies to the oyster, have given but little trouble this year."

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

BUTTERINE is superseding oleomargarine. Where the latter is made from pure ox fat, the former is manufactured from deodorized lard. A major part of the butterine sold comes from near Chicago.

IN 1791 Benjamin Franklin made the city of Boston the trustee of a fund of £1,000, to be lent to young mechanics, calculating that in 1891 the fund would amount to $582,000. His figures must have been faulty, however, for the fund now only amounts to $291,000.

ON some of the sheep ranches in the Western Territories there are as many as 300,000 sheep. Shearing begins in September, and October is a busy season. The sight of from 300 to 400 men at work, each clipping a sheep in a dextrous manner, is very animated.

A COMPANY of Mennonites numbering 80 persons passed through Berlin recently on their way to this country. They were possessed of a considerable sum of money, and were under the leadership of a fine-looking, silver-haired man, 95 years of age, who had been recently married to a girl of 16.

THE Massachusetts Bureau of Statistics states that in 1868 the chance of a person being killed on or by steam cars was 1 in 5,026,281, while in 1882 it had diminished to 1 in 20,927,084. This is less than the chance of being struck by lightning, and much less than that of being injured by a kerosene lamp explosion.

THE War Department at Rome has invited all Italian emigrants settled in foreign countries to return home and fulfill their military duties, every male of 21 years old being subject to conscription, regardless of naturalization abroad. Italy has repeatedly refused to exempt her sons naturalized in the United States.

SWISS STATISTICS show that the land of Switzerland and its natural productions afford employment for 410,023 men and 147,716 women, and that the labor of these persons supports 1,168,137 individuals. Those who live on rents, interest, pensions, and annuities number in Switzerland 56,055, or about two in each 100 of population.

STEP by step the leading food products of Europe are being reproduced in this country. Macaroni is made by Italians in New York, Neuchatel cheese by Swiss in New Jersey, Schweitzer kase by Germans in Ohio, Albert biscuit by Englishmen in Albany and caviare by Russians in Harlem. Nearly all of these are exported to Europe, and there sold as domestic manufactures.

SOME weeks since an English school teacher boxed a child's ears with some severity. There followed a severe and long-continued headache, and it is not unlikely that the child is injured for life. The medical journals agree as to the very great impropriety of punishing a child in this way, and give the many anatomical and medical reasons against it so clearly that the brutal practice is likely to be lessened.

A CORRESPONDENT writes to an English paper: "While lying off Madras, in the harbor, on my way from India, I had my attention drawn to a white gentleman with brown legs, on a catamaran. It was explained to me that the natives went about the shark-infested harbor with impunity, and that the European had had several narrow escapes until he colored the lower part of his body and its extremities, since which he had gone about unscared."

The French Canadians.

Interesting as sections of ancient rocks or drifts to the geologist are those sections of the France of the seventeenth century in the lap of the nineteenth century in the new world to the sociologist. The ancient city of Quebec is still the centre of all the French Canadian life; and how full of quaint beauty and poetry it is only they know fully who have been wearied to death by the monotonous opulent commonness of American cities. The student who would make inquiries into this life, the annals, the customs and the trend of thinking among the people will find the Cote de Beaupre, a strip of country extending down the river in the vicinity of Quebec, a most accessible district, and at the same time possibly the most perfect illustration of what he desires to investigate. Not very long ago, the Abbe Ferland said, "In the habitan of the Cote de Beaupre you have the Norman peasant of the reign of Louis XIV., with his legends, his songs, his superstitions and his customs." Unfortunately for him, he still sticks to old fashions in farming, as well as to old songs, and the staff Locally pervades that his ancestors brought from France. CHILTON VIEW.

CLANTON, ALA., OCT. 16, 1884.

The Alabama legislature will meet on Monday, November 10th, and sit fifty days. Now comes the housecombing of the code.—Ex.

Judge Brickell has tendered his resignation as Chief Justice of the Alabama Supreme Court. Inadequacy of salary probably the cause.

The Birmingham Iron Age will issue a World's Fair edition to be distributed gratuitously at the World's Exposition this winter at New Orleans.

Readers of newspapers are surprised to learn that there is a Dr. Dedman in Kentucky. It is usually the patient who is the Dedman.

Dr. Mary Walker's offer to kiss the man who will vote for Belva Lockwood is supposed to be a temptation prepared for Gen. Sherman.

At the recent Democratic demonstration in San Francisco 8,000 men, superbly uniformed and carrying each a gilt-handled torch, walked in the procession.

A campaign banner, with her portrait on it and all, has been erected to Belva Lockwood at Trenton, N. J., the event being celebrated in a high and howling political style.

The oldest couple in Alabama is perhaps Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Stewart, of Pike county. He is one hundred and three and she is ninety-three and they have been married for seventy years.

Mr. Rittenhouse Moore, of Mobile, is the largest river and harbor improvement contractor in the South, the work he is engaged upon extending from the Brazos river, Texas, to Cape Fear, North Carolina.

The corn crop this year is the largest ever produced in the country. According to grain experts it may reach as high as 2,000,000,000 bushels. This will leave more for bread after the distilleries have been supplied.

The Boston Herald (Rep.) says: "The real issue of the Presidential campaign is this: Shall this great republic elect for its Chief Magistrate a man who, by the proof of his own letters, has used his public position for private gain, and lied about it?"

The Gadsden Times is somewhat in error about being the first and only paper in the State to correct the published statement in regard to the pistols and deadly weapons in this State as compared with farming implements. The Times man does not read his Alabama exchanges. Several papers were ahead of the Times in correcting the error, the VIEW being one of them.

We take pleasure in giving the following extract from a private letter in reference to the success of Solicitor A. V. Lee as the prosecuting officer for the Third Alabama Judicial District:

"In Geneva Circuit Court he had 14 criminal convictions and no jury acquittal. In Coffee county 20 convictions and no jury acquittals and only lost two by acquittals in Dale county."

Solicitor Lee is undoubtedly one of the best criminal prosecutors in the State, and the Judicial District should by all means retain him as long as he will have the position, and if it were left to the people there would be no change as to the officer.—Opelika Times.

The Philadelphia Times, in speaking of the present canvass, says that Ohio has, since 1852, always been republican in presidential years. It says that the present attitude of the republican party towards this state shows the desperate condition of their cause. Mr. Blaine, it says, to carry this republican state, has found it necessary to visit New York and Pennsylvannia and review parades and torchlight processions, and burst upon Ohio, upon the eve of the election, with the thunder of applause and enthusiasm in his track. It then asks if such desperate measures are necessary to maintain republican Ohio in the republican ranks, how can the fairly debatable states of Indiana, New York, New Jersey and Nevada be covered from Cleveland. It says that enthusiasm will not solve the question, common sense figures it [illegible]

Tuesday's Elections.

Ohio and West Virginia held elections for State officers and Congressmen on Tuesday. The long and short of the story is that Ohio maintains her place in the Republican ranks by from 15,000 to 20,000 majority. Nothing better could have been expected of Ohio in a Presidential year, and the State may be turned over now to the Republicans for the November election. It can't be counted on, and as its electoral vote is not essential to Democratic success in November, it is certainly unnecessary to waste hope upon it.

West Virginia goes Democratic by a good majority.

An Industrial Bureau.

An effort will be made at the next session of our General Assembly to establish an Industrial and Immigration Bureau, with a small appropriation to maintain properly such a department. A bureau of this character should be established for the purpose of compiling a comprehensive review of the resources and industries of Alabama; showing the value and price of lands, the character of the soil, climate, health and labor statistics; agricultural products, and, in short, all information touching those things which would be interesting to this people and instructive to those who are seeking Southern homes and Southern investments.

Much has been written concerning the resources of Alabama, and the plausible efforts of a few progressive citizens have resulted in the great development of their immediate sections; but, it is true, that no systematic work has been done under official sanction, and the outside world is, as a rule, ignorant concerning the inviting prospects which are so manifest in this State.

The Industrial and Immigration Bureau should be established for the purpose of collecting definite information about the resources and advantages of every county in the State. This should be carefully arranged in a comprehensive volume for general distribution. A liberal collection of agricultural products and minerals should be made with great care, and placed in some public building as the permanent property of the State. In this way every land owner in the State would have an opportunity of advertising his interest in the most advantageous manner, and in a short while there would be collected a most creditable exhibit of our resources and industries. Surely it is not within the power of our State to present in a more plausible way, the great opportunities which are within its borders, nor can it in any manner more positively insure the permanent prosperity of its people.

This journal has no interest in this question beyond a desire to see the industrial interest of Alabama placed in a position corresponding to the progress of other Southern States, and with this in view we advocate the establishment of such a Bureau.

Improve The Coosa.

There is a matter of public importance in the state of Alabama, which should command the earnest attention and hearty co-operation of the State's Senators and Representatives in Congress.

We refer to the Coosa river, one of the most important streams in the South. The Coosa flows through Georgia and Alabama, the natural artery of the garden of the South. The farming lands drained by this stream are of unsurpressed fertility, and the hills and mountains on either side teem with coal and iron and silver and gold and marble as fine as ever came from Italian quarries.

Few people, even in our own State, fully appreciate the Coosa as an artery of commerce, and precious few dream of the natural wealth lying along its banks, to say nothing of a beauty that is absolutely grand in its scope. It is broad and deep except at a few points where marble contends with water for the mastery. And on every hand nature has poured out her richest gifts to man in such profusion as to challenge our admiration. Here immense wealth lies and invites the people to come and grow great with scarcely a struggle.

A comparatively little expenditure on the part of the Federal government would make the Coosa navigable to the Alabama, thus opening up a river many hundreds of miles in extent, reaching from North Georgia and Tennessee to the gulf at Mobile. Why shouldn't this great work of internal improvement be accomplished? There is no reason why it should not. Today there is not a river in America the improvement of which would benefit more people and accomplish greater good. The way [illegible] der is that the Coosa has not already been made navigable to the Alabama. It is singular that so great a work has so long been neglected; and our Senators and Representatives must be up and doing. They must move in the matter, and move at once. The people of Georgia and Tennessee are interested and their representatives in the national Legislature should join these of Alabama in demanding the improvement of the Coosa.

From Rome to Gadsden, from Gadsden to within a few miles of Montgomery, the Coosa flows through a land which rivals in natural beauty the famous highlands of the Hudson, and there is more mineral wealth in one square mile of the Coosa's territory, than in two hundred miles of the Hudson's beautiful land. Only a trifling part of the vast surplus in the National treasury is needed to make the Coosa what nature intended it to be—the Rhine of the South. And let those who represent us in Congress see to it that the Coosa is no longer neglected; let them see that this demand of the people of two great States is complied with.

Let the Coosa river be properly improved.—Advertiser.

Industry or Idleness?

Selma Times.

It has always seemed to us that on a well regulated farm there would be work from year's end to year's end, with the exception of such holidays as the church, the State and the picnic season might prescribe. Certainly in all other businesses where labor is the chief factor of success all seasons are seasons of work. In the old days when farming in Alabama was a profitable pursuit and the land flowed with milk and honey and wine, and the low of kine and the bleat of sheep and the grunt of the fat porker were familiar sounds, to labor without ceasing was as much a law in the practical life of the country as to pray without ceasing is now a law in the spiritual life of the upright. We have heard from divers and sundry sources that in those portions of the land where paint still decorates the farm houses and corn fields the barns, and the court houses are not too small to hold the mortgage records, the work of sowing and cultivating and garnering, and preparing to sow and cultivate and garner again is ceasless, even as the labor of the unresting mechanic and artisan and factory hand is ceaseless.

The ways of Providence are past finding out. The devastation of civil war decreed in this fair and fertile agricultural land of Alabama that the people should become poor and also that the time of their poverty should be a time of rest. Fortunate people, whose loss of wealth meant less of labor.

We notice that with the return of prosperity the old law is coming back. There are prosperous men in this country and as their worldly possessions grow there is less of idleness on their farms between the "laying by" and the harvest time and there is even a bustle of industry between the last picking and the first planting. Is returning prosperity the cause of this great industry or is greater industry the cause of returning prosperity? Who knows? At any rate, until land letting and crop sharing and idleness strolling over all the highways shall depart from the land, the horn of plenty will be a sounding emptiness.

The land owner must control the labor and whether the labor be that land owner himself or his hired men, to work two hundred days in the year will never fill the lap of wealth. The land owner must be the land ruler, and the stomach of idleness will cease to absorb what fatness is yet in the fairest State beneath the sun.

A NEW LAW.

Proposed For the Protection of Women Against Drunken Husbands.

To The Age.

CENTRAL MILLS, DALLAS, Co., ALA. October 4.—The following is the text of a statue which is presented to the people of Alabama with the humble hope that they will urge the next grand assembly to make it a law in this state. The women of Alabama comprise the better and purer class of its citizens, and it is certainly but even-handed justice that they should have the means placed in their power to protect themselves, and their families from the horrors of drunkenness. This proposed statute is the substance of a resolution which was presented to the Dallas County Temperance Alliance by Maj. F. M. Dansby, and it was adopted at its last meeting in the city of Selma:

Be it enacted by the general assembly of Alabama:

That no probate judge shall issue a license for the sale of intoxicating drinks of any kind, unless proof be made before him by the testimony of three creditable witnesses, testifying under oath, that the petition of said appliant for license to sell said drink or liquors has been signed by every woman within five miles of the proposed place of sale of said liquors or drinks, in addition to those already required by law.

SEC. 2. That any probate judge violating the provisions of this statute, shall be fined one thousand dollars, one half to go to the prosecutor or informer, and the other to the county.

Life of the Newspaper Man.

An exchange says: "It is strange how closely people read the papers. We never say anything that people don't like but what we hear of it. But if once and a while we happen to say a good thing we never hear of it; that nobody seems to notice. We may pay some poor man a hundred compliments and give him a dozen puffs and he takes it as a tribute to his greatness and never thinks it does him any good. But we happen to say something he doesn't like or something that he imagines reflects on his character, see how quick he gets mad about it. All our evil is duly charged to us; but we never apparently, get any credit for what we do. Such is the life of a newspaper man."

The committee of the drummer's national convention has formally notified the Hon. Jos. Mulhatton, of Louisville, of his nomination for the presidency, and he has accepted. It will be a tight race between Blaine and Mulhatton as to which can beat the other in running roughshod over truth and crushing it to earth. Cleveland's slogan is, "Tell the truth." Blaine's, "Tell a thousand lies if they will do us any good." Mulhatton's, "Tell a lie even if the truth wil serve us better."—Ex.

She Had Confidence.

Mrs. H. C. Harshbarger, Manor Hill, Huntingdon County, Pa., writes: "DR. S B. HARTMAN & Co., Columbus, O.: I have been afflicted for three years, caused by over-work too soon after confinement. My kidneys became seriously affected; could not retain my urine day nor night. It was high colored, thick and bloody. My monthlies had left altogether for fourteen months, during which time I was confined to my bed with a bearing in right ovaries. The discharge from the womb was so offensive no one could stay in the room. The urine continued bloody, with pain in voiding it, and when in bed would pass from me in my sleep. I have had three doctors attending me regularly, one for four months, one of the others one whole summer, and the third all winter. We had two others in consultation with them, and used twenty bottles of different kinds of patent medicines, all to no good. I then got a bottle of PERUNA, and before I had three-fourths of the bottle taken I quit wetting the bed and could retain the urine sufficient to attend church, which I had not done for three years, and my monthlies came back as natural as ever; indeed, I considered myself a well woman again. Since that time I have had pneumonia. My confidence in PERUNA was so great that I did not send for a doctor. I followed the directions in your "Ills of Life" and am over it, as well as can be expected of one so delicate as I have been. Others in my neighborhood had the same disease, and among them were strong men, and had the best physicians, and yet died, while I sailed through in safety on PERUNA and MANALIN. I sincerely believe, and would say to all the afflicted in the wide world, that PERUNA and MANALIN are the only two medicines that any one needs in any disease, if used as directed in your book entitled "The Ills of Life."

J. E. Fleming, publisher of the New Dominion, Morgantown, W. Va. writes: "Some months since, I received some of your medicine in exchange for advertising. My wife has taken five bottles of it, and has derived great benefit from it."

Mr. M. C. Pershing, Bradenville, Pa., writes: "My wife has been using PERUNA for some time for weak lungs and liver and kidney complaint, and thinks it is doing her great good. Has used only one bottle as yet. Please send your book on the 'Ills of Life,' as we can't get any from our druggist."

Mr. John Denny, Mt. Vernon, O., writes: "We have a large sale in PERUNA It gives satisfaction."

LOCAL DOTTINGS.

Fall weather but no rain yet.

Bring your cotton to Clanton You will get a good price here.

Yesterday morning was cold enough for fires—the first of the season. Frost this morning.

Mr. P. A. Noblett has purchased a lot and built a residence in Clanton.

Rev. J. L. Thompson, of Verbena, will preach at the Methodist church to-night.

Bring us your job printing. We guarantee satisfaction in both prices and work.

Mrs. A. M. Adams, with her family, is visiting her former home, Florence, Ala.

Three weeks from Thursday the Presidential and Congressional election takes place.

Mr. J. W. Edwards, of Kincheon, has purchased a lot in Clanton and will build a store house for rent.

An extra fine lot of bill head letter head and note head stationery just received at the VIEW office.

In Montgomery low middling cotton is selling at 8 15-16 to 9 cents. In Clanton it brings the same price freight off.

Brooks at Verbena has just received a car load of the celebrated Tennessee Wagons. Prices are low like the price of cotton. Fully warranted in every particular. Buy one.

Several subscribers to the VIEW gave us a call and paid their subscription for the year. This is a good example, and we hope those still in arrears will do likewise at the earliest moment.

Several from this place went on the excursion to Louisville Monday. The fare was only $5 for the round trip—ample time being allowed for the excursionists to visit the exposition.

Rev. L. B. Cross, of Shelby county, assisted Rev. J. W. Shores in the protracted meeting at the Methodist church. He is a forcible and interesting speaker, and delivered some very effective sermons.

Mr. O. A. Duke brings the VIEW the rattles of a ground rattle snake, which he killed on his premises. It consists of nine rattles and a button, being remarkably large for a ground rattle snake.

A German newspaper contains the following advertisement: "If Charles Frankenberger will either call or write to Karl Schmidt, on the Kaiser strasse, No. 26, he will hear something to his advantage. His wife is dead."

See notice of dissolution of the copartnership heretofore existing between Adams & Callier, at Callierville. Mr. Adams retires from the firm and Dr. T. E. Callier becomes a member. We bespeak for the new firm a liberal patronage.

Why is it that there are more old barrel hoops lying around loose to fly up and strike a fellow on the shins at night in dusty weather when a load of dust will be distributed over his pants, than there is in any other kind of weather?

Post masters will please see that each subscriber gets his paper when it is sent out from this office. We publish this request to the different postmasters in the county because several subscribers complain that they do not get their paper regularly.

Public Speaking.

Hon. Thos. W. Sadler and Feliz L. Smith, Esq., will address the people of Chilton county at Cooper's Station on Thursday, Oct. 30.

Bound Over.

The preliminary examination of Mr. M. T. Hamrick, charged with the killing of Mr. A. K. Evans, was had before Judge H. J. Callen on Saturday last. The defendant was admitted to bail in the sum of $1,000 to appear before the circuit court.

The Protracted Meeting.

A protracted meeting has been in progress at the Methodist Church for some time. It has resulted in much good. On Friday night three applicants for church membership were received by baptism, and on Sunday night two others were received. These revivals have awakened much religious feeling in our community that will be of great and lasting good.

A protracted meeting at Walnut Creek Protestant Methodist church closed on Sunday night last with 12 accessions to the church membership, making 49 new members that have been added to this church during the past year. Rev. T. A. Gibson has charge of this church and of four other churches of the same denomination in this county. There have been 101 accessions to the five churches during the past year, that he has been in charge.

TO THE PEOPLE OF CHILTON AND ADJOINING COUNTIES!

I have now in store the finest and largest stock of goods of all descriptions ever brought to Chilton county, and propose to sell them lower than any other merchant in the county. I will pay the highest market price for your cotton, and give you the money for it. Come right along: tight times dictate prices, and it makes no difference if cotton is low, what you want is equally as cheap, so that should not keep you from marketing your cotton.

To those who owe me: Please come right along and settle. I need the money. I accommodated you last Spring, now you can return the favor.

A. J. BROOKS.

Alabama Politics.

Special to the Constitution.

MONTGOMERY, October 7. The Republican electoral State ticket just issued has the following names: William Warner, John W. Jones, George W. Starkes, Benjamin Gardner, W. C. Patterson, E. W. Lucky, Lewis Parsons, Jr., Benjamin M. Long, George Parsons and Chas. P. Lane.

The difference between 9 and 10 cents per pound for cotton will be $30,000,000. Thirty million of dollars would build thirty fine cotton factories. Run that through a decade and you would see a people more opulent than an ordinary prince. How that would augment the wealth of the South! The farmer says this state of affairs is brought about by the happy merchant who fattens on his children's life-blood. The merchant says it comes from the stupidity of the farmer who fails to plant food supplies for man and beast. Be that as it may, the result is on us. There is a remedy, and a feasible one, within your grasp. A diversified industry and a copious supply of grain and meat, would place the South far above the care and vexation growing out of too much cotton and too little grain.

Now that winter is near at hand we will give several subscriptions for wood. Bring us in a load of wood if it suits you better.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.

Are you disturbed at night and broken out of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup For Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhoea, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflamation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children Teething is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price 25 cents a bottle. [mal

THE BENEFICIAL RESULTS OF LEARNING A TRADE.

And at the Same Time Such a Trade as You Have a Taste for.

[M. Quad, in Detroit Free Press.]

The father who says to his son: "Here, Will, I've decided to make a harness-maker of you," and who insists on the boy adopting that trade, is an idiot. He may compel the boy to learn it, but he will, nineteen times out of twenty, make a workman who can't earn his own bread and clothes. The average boy has an instinctive leaning toward the trade he is fitted for, and he should be left reasonably free in the matter.

It used to be quite the thing for some old bald-head to pick up a baby and tell its mother in all seriousness that the size of the head, set of the eyes, hight of the forehead, or width between the eyes was a plain indication that he would become a great judge, poet, inventor or mathematician. There are plenty of instances where such stuff has taken root and resulted in parents forcing sons into trades or professions utterly unsuited to their physical constitution or mental caliber. It is quite natural for a father or mother to desire a son to make the selection of a good trade or profession, but this desire should not become an order or even a request. Said a blacksmith the other day as he flung down his hammer:

"If my father had been a sensible man I shouldn't have been here. I had a natural taste for drawing and engraving, and I have no doubt I would have made a good one. Nothing would do but I must become a blacksmith, and here I am, supporting a family on $11 per week. I hate the work; I have no interest in what I do, but I've got to pound away and hear myself called a botch because I'm too old to go at any other trade."

I found a lawyer the other day in a shabby third-story room, furnished with an old desk, two old chairs and a spittoon. His clothes looked worn, and his face had anything but a contented look.

"Oh, I thought it might be a client," he said as I entered.

"Sorry it wasn't. You don't seem to be rushed with business."

"Rushed! Why, I haven't had a $5 fee in three weeks!"

"Too far up?"

"Perhaps, but I believe the real reason is that I hate the profession. I was cut out for something else. As a boy I was crazy to learn the printer's trade. I got a chance and worked for three months, but at the end of that time my widowed mother prevailed upon me to study for the law. I managed to graduate, passed an examination, and the result is that I can't marry because I can't half support myself."

Farmers make a great mistake in deciding that their sons must follow the same pursuit. It is very convenient for them to come to this decision. It saves the expense of educating a boy, and by keeping him at home it saves paying a hired man. They claim the services of a son until he is 21 years of age, and if he then desires to start out with a trade he is handicapped by his age. He must either go farming or become a laborer. It seems not to occur to the close-fisted old farmer that while he may save from $8 to $12 per month by hanging to his boy on the farm, the boy, if given a fair chance, could take up some trade or profession which would pay $10 to $1.

What about the boy who does not take up with a trade or profession?

Look around you and the question is speedily answered. He must cast his hook into any sort of pond and take such fish as may be caught. He is a sort of tramp. He may work in a brick-yard to-day and in the harvest field to-morrow. He does the drudgery and gets the pay of the drudge. His wages are so small that he finds it impossible to lay up a dollar, and a fortnight of idleness will see him dead broke. The other evening I met a man dragging himself wearily along and carrying a pick on his shoulder.

"Tired, John?"

"More so than any horse in Detroit."

"What do you work at?"

"I'm a digger. Sometimes I work for the gas companies, but oftener for plumbers."

"Good wages?"

"So good that my family never has enough to eat, let alone buying decent clothes. If it wasn't for the wife and children I'd wish for that street car to run over me."

"Why didn't you learn a trade?"

"Became nobody had interest enough to reason and argue with me. I might have had a good trade and earned good wages, but here I am, working harder for $8 or $9 a week than any man does to earn $18."

And now, my boy, if men tell you that the trades are crowded, and that so many carpenters and blacksmiths and painters and shoemakers and other trades heap wages down, pay no attention to such talk. Look over the table at the head of this article again. Notice that little "to" in there between what a common and skillful workman receives. Take the trade which you seem fitted for. Begin with a determination to learn it thoroughly, and to become the best workman in the shop. Don't be satisfied to skin along from one week to another without being discharged, but make your services so valuable by being such a thorough workman that your employer cannot afford to let you go.

THE ASHES.—According to the Medical Times, the ashes of the late Prof. S. D. Gross weighed seven pounds. They were enclosed in a marble urn about three feet high, without ornament or inscription, and placed beside the ashes of his deceased wife in Woodlawn.

OUR OLD INDIAN COMMERCE.

It has all Gone and Will Never Come Back to Us any More—Picture of the Past.

Our commerce with Calcutta and British India in general had grown with its growth, commencing long before our last war with England and greatly increasing afterwards, writes Capt. John Drew to the Boston Journal. Salem merchants were largely engaged in it, and I used to be told Beverly men shared with them, but it finally culminated in Boston before the war of the Rebellion, and since then has been carried mostly to New York by English iron ships. In the day I write of, American ships were in such demand that the new ship Dashaway, built in Hallowell, 1100 tons register, commanded by Capt. John McClintock, went direct in ballast to Calcutta for a return cargo to Boston. Before this era were the good vessels called "Crack Indiamen," remembered by our old sailors now. They were always nearly in Boston and Calcutta or India trade. These were the Arab, the Akbar, the Argo, the Chilo, the Orissa, the Coniga, the Hindostan, the Benegal, the Suttej, Simla, Jumna, Timour and Gentoo; and so many more that always discharge into the warehouses of Boston. Why, a Boston wharf, India, Central or Union, was the very essence of the East Indies. And our merchants owned both ship and cargo, inward and outward. This was what made "commerce." They had to have ships for their commerce and they had to have commerce for their ships. One of these merchants still lives, at a very advanced age, and I learned my business in his employ. He loved to tell me of the days when he and other merchants had been supercargoes and sometimes took charge of vessels. He said he carried his own palm and needle, his pid and marline-spike, and ditty-bag, darned and mended his own clothes, as well as bought and sold with the baboos of Bengal. They shipped and discharged American sailors on the capstan-head, and the owner always interviewed each man in regard to his birthplace, age, capacity to perform what he shipped for, and they (the sailors) bought their own small stores. This gentleman sent his own sons out east to learn as he had, and when I returned off of one of my voyages he told me, with watery eyes, "My son died out there, Mr. D.; I shall never see him again!" Don't you see the affinity between merchant and master and officer, reader? As our commerce grew up with that of India, so our ships grew up with those of the English Indiamen, had many of their ways, "sayings and doings" on board, and were the best school for a young man to learn seamanship in afloat. How quick the transition! Now look at the picture.

We can never have the like again. The owner will never own his own cargo again. There never will be that fellowship between owner, master and officer again, for captains were the privileged friends of the owner, and each were dependent upon the other for success. The captains and officers were patriots, glorying in the flag they bore to every part of the globe. Ships were literally unshackled, free; that can never be again in our day. Captains and owners were never harmed or hampered by customs or consular officers, but were always on the best of terms.

OLD PUT'S WOLF DEN.

An Exploration of the Cavern in which Gen. Putnam Killed the Wolf.

The famous wolf den in Pomfret, Conn., into which Gen. Israel Putnam crawled, and from which, after he had killed the old she-wolf that had destroyed his sheep, he was drawn out by his neighbors by means of a rope attached to his body, himself pulling the dead animal after him, is gradually filling up with the accumulation of gravel and stones that fall from the roof and sides. It was visited by a merry picnicking party of ladies and gentlemen from Old Mashentuck, East Killingly, the other day. They spread a table in the lonely brush pasture near the cave, had dinner, and made speeches about Old Put, the Revolution, the wolf hunt, and so on. One of the party, the Rev. G. H. Child, was appointed to explore the cavern. The opening, which is about two feet square, is near the top of a high ridge, that is strewn with cyclopean boulders, about half a mile from the country road. A few stunted forest trees grow aslant from rocky footholds along the hillside. The surroundings are wild and rugged. There is no dwelling house within many miles. Mr. Child squeezed through the aperture, and, with his lantern on his arm, crawled along the narrow passage downward for seventeen feet. There he reached the open chamber of the cave, in which he could stand nearly upright. It was impossible to penetrate further, the passage being almost closed with small stones. It was at this point that Putnam saw the old wolf ten or fifteen feet beyond him squeezed into the extreme end of the cave, "growling and gnashing her teeth." Half rising, with his knee for a rifle rest, and holding his lantern high in his left hand above his head so as to illuminate the further darkness, Putnam coolly sent a bullet into the animal's brain. Mr. Child found that the sides of the cave are very rough and uneven. The roof is as smooth and regular as though it had been carved by the hand of man.

The wolf den is five or six miles from the railroad, and few persons visit it on account of the difficulty of getting there. The nearest settlement is Pomfret street, a beautiful, sequestered country village, itself several miles from railroads, to which wealthy city people whose youth was spent among the hills of old Windham county resort, to live over again the old-fashioned days. Lofty elms and spreading maples shadow the village, and all day nearly a sound is heard in its straight, grassy street. Two houses are old and primitive in style, but very neat and tidy, with trim gardens at the village side.

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS AGO.

ANNIVERSARY OF COL. DRAKE'S DISCOVERY OF PETROLEUM.

The First Vein of Oil Struck at Titusville, August 28th, 1859, and More Than $400,000,000 Invested since.

[From a letter to the New York Times.]

Twenty-five years ago was ushered into existence the most distinctively American industry of petroleum producing. Petroleum and its illuminating properties had been widely known for centuries before on the banks of the Irrawaddy, in British Burmah, in Afghanistan, in Persia, in Turkistan, in Sicily, and elsewhere, but it remained for the United States to produce it and place it among the great articles of the world's commerce.

Few industries are so little known, even by Americans, as the petroleum, yet for interesting, one might almost say romantic, surroundings there are none on the face of the globe to compare with it, not even fishery. Moreover, its history is longer, more marvelous, and exciting than anything in the California days of '49 or what followed Hargreave's discovery in New South Wales.

The first oil well ever drilled was put down near Titusville just without the city limits. Travelers on the Buffalo, New York and Philadelphia Railroad know the long, woody dell gorge through which the train winds on its way through the Oil Creek Valley. This gorge, at no point very broad, widens near Titusville into a plain in which Titusville lies. At what may be termed the mouth of this gorge the first oil well was sunk in 1859 by Colonel Drake, of New Haven, Conn. From the old Indian days petroleum, known as Seneca oil, had existed in the vicinity. Large quantities floating on Oil Creek had been gathered and used for medicinal purposes. From 1854 to 1858 producing operations of a crude nature were carried on by Messrs. Bissell & Evereth. Trenches were dug into which oil oozed and was afterward pumped into vats. In 1855 these gentlemen sold one-third of their property to some New Haven capitalists. The Pennsylvania Rock Oil Company was formed and Col. Drake engaged to sink a well on the artesian principle. Work was commenced May, 1859, and the first vein of oil was struck Aug. 28—25 years ago—at a depth of 69½ feet.

The production of the well at first was ten barrels a day, and sold for fifty cents a barrel. In September, pumping apparatus was applied to the well, and it yielded for a long time between twenty and forty barrels daily. Such is a very rough sketch of the celebrated Drake well, by which the possibility of producing oil direct from the rock was demonstrated. But it was, of course, only the beginning. The tools used were, compared with those of to-day, of a primitive, almost Adamite type. Wells were then what is called "kicked down" by the feet. The use of steam was an after thought.

Col. Drake's success revolutionized things in the little Northwest Pennsylvania hamlet. Like some enchanter he had raised the rough-hewn derrick in the forest solitude and conquered a strange, long pent-up genie from the earth's interior. The birth of a new light—rare enchanter's work, indeed. In a short time, on the level lands around Drake's well and along the banks of the shallow, rippling Oil Creek, and on the sides of the neighboring hemlock-clad hills, resounded the rap of the hammer and the rumble of wagons as derrick after derrick arose. The race for wealth, with the accompanying mad speculation in land, had begun. Titusville was in a few years a city of 10,000 inhabitants.

The next step in producing was the drilling of wells down to the third sand where a much larger production was maintained. In September, 1861, the famous Phillips well on Oil Creek was struck, and did 4,000 barrels in the first day. This was followed by the Empire and other wells. In the meantime oil was selling all the way from 10 cents to $20 a barrel, though the average price was $4. There is no need to trace the extension of operations, the opening of new fields in Venango, Butler, Clarion, and McKean Counties, in Pennsylvania, and in New York at Richburg. The total production increased rapidly from 82,000 barrels in 1859 to 2,000,000 in 1876. Then came the great Bradford field and the following year the production jumped to 13,000,000. Since then the yearly increase has been about 5,000,000 barrels. The greatest production was obtained in 1882, when it reached the enormous total of 31,789,190 barrels.

Petroleum was shipped to market at first in barges down the Allegheney River, and by teams and rail. In time the trade outgrew these modes of transit; speedier and, above all, cheaper means were necessary. Then came the pipe lines, which to-day are connected with 21,000 wells, receiving from them daily 65,000 barrels of oil. In addition they hold, stored in iron tanks, over 41,000,000 barrels, representing the surplus for accumulated stock. To transport and store this enormous quantity of oil about 5,000 miles of pipe line and over 1,600 iron tanks of an average capacity are necessary. Besides the 5,000 miles of branch pipe lines in use in the region, there are 1,200 miles of trunk line for piping oil to the refineries at the seaboard in Cleveland, Buffalo and Pittsburg. Between Olean, N. Y., and New York City nearly 20,000 barrels of oil are piped daily. Most of the tanks at present being built are of 35,000 barrels capacity. These huge cauldron-like structures stud the oil regions from end to end by hundreds. They are uniformly 25 feet high and 90 feet in diameter. Their average cost is $8,000. The enormous stocks (41,000,000 barrels) are the oil men's bane, keeping prices at times below the cost of production. The oil is represented by [illegible certificates] in any of the great money centres of the country. The oil is worth [illegible] per barrel.

SCENES AT RAILROAD STATIONS.

The Experience of the Man at the Ticket Window.

"Funny sights," said the man at the ticket window in the Union depot yesterday.

"What do you see that amuses you?" inquired a bystander.

"Things that occur around the depot here almost every day. I do believe there are more funny incidents in connection with railroading than with any other business in the world," continued the ticket man. "Just a few days ago a stout, red-faced woman, carrying a large basket and several bundles, came along and asked what time the next train went to Cleveland. I told her. 'An' what the divil's time is ten minutes past fifty?' she asked. I was obliged to explain my meaning, and came near laughing in her face. Another woman of the same stamp wanted to go to Manchester. 'If you see Mike McCarty,' she said, 'tell 'im I'm goin' down with him'—as if everybody in the world knew Mike McCarty. It is a very common thing for people to set their watches by the clock here in the depot, and on returning to the depot after a trip down town come rushing in asking what time the next train goes, as if we knew who they were and where they wanted to go. They often question me about like this: 'What time does the next train go to the East End?' 'Four o'clock.' 'Well, isn't there one before that?' 'No, not before the next one,' I say. I answered a lady in that way only the other day. I guess the absurdity of her last question struck her when I did, for she laughed, colored a little and walked away.

"A funny old lady came here the other day. She asked all sorts of questions about the train, tickets, etc., and wound up with: 'I'm in from New Castle. You don't know what butter's wuth, now, do you?'

"An old lady came to the ticket window recently and wrapped several times to attract my attention, evidently in great haste. She wanted a ticket, and when I gave it to her I told her that there was no hurry, as her train would not start for half an hour. 'No matter,' she said, 'trains sometimes start ahead of time,' and off she went, as if she didn't have a moment to lose. Sometimes ladies will come up to the window opening into the ladies' room and ask if they must go outside to take the train. I tell them that we do not generally bring the train inside, and some laugh and some look cross.

"Recently a woman that I am acquainted with came from the cars in the morning carrying a baby. Late in the afternoon I saw her getting on the train all alone, and asked where her baby was. 'There,' she said, 'I knew I'd forgotten something,' and she had just time to get her baby from the waiting-room and catch her train."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

What Stopped Him.

If the drunkard-makers would boast oftener to their victims of the way they make their money, it might end their bad business after a while. Another instance of a man reformed by the insulting thought of what profit his own wasted money was to his enemies, is the following from the "Autobiography of a Workingman," which an ignorant English laborer communicated (with some editorial assistance) to Macmillan's Magazine. It presents a vivid picture of real life among the English poor, and of the agency of drink in forcing down a man's better feelings into a mere struggle for existence.

Perhaps you'd like to hear the way I was broke of drinking. When first I married, I used to sit and look at my wife plaiting straw till the blood ran out at the ends of her fingers; and when she'd done a good bit, I'd say:

"Now, old gal, go and sell that plait, and get me a pint of beer."

She'd say: "Bill, you oughtn't to go on like this." But still she'd sit and plait, and give me the money.

Sometimes I'd say: "Well, I'll try and get better some day; but money I want, and some I must have."

"Now, Bill, it's of no use my trying to get on, and you a-trying agin me all the while. We shall always be bad off," she'd say. "We should both pull on way."

"If we put the sheet over the beam, and both pull the same way, we shall pull it in two in the middle," I'd say, joking. "Never mind, old gal. I'll alter some day."

"I don't know when, Bill, but I'm afraid you never'll alter till the Lord Almighty alters you."

One day, I went as usual to the public house, where I was in the habit fo spending seven or eight shillings a week in drink.

"Good evening, Mrs. Walton," I says to the landlady.

"Good evening, Bill."

"What fine caps you always have on your head, Mrs. Walton. How do you get them?" says I.

"Why, take them out of such fools as you to be sure," says she.

"Thank you, Mrs. Walton." I hope that's done me good," says I. "I should have talked a long time to you afore I'd have called you a fool."

And I went straight home and off to bed without saying a word to anybody. Then I considered about what Mrs. Walton had called me. I says: "It's done me good; she'll never call me fool again."

And from that time I spent no more money for beer.

SOLDIERS IN MEXICO.—Some of the enlisted men in the Mexican army are fine soldiers, writes a U. S. officer who has been there, but there are regiments made up of criminals who have been sentenced to years of service in the army, instead of in prison. I have seen these men driven into pens like cattle, and their heads thrown into them. These [illegible] are usually kept in the [illegible] of a hacienda, and are employed [illegible]

It is better to be a beggar than an ignorant person; for a beggar only wants money; but an ignorant person wants humanity.

New Catalogues of Organs.

The MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN AND PIANO COMPANY have just issued their new catalogue for the season of 1884-5. It forms a handsome 48to pamphlet of forty-six pages, and contains illustrations accurately showing the appearance of all the styles of organs regularly made by them, with detailed descriptions of the capacity of each; together with quite full mention of the general modes of construction employed and the great favor with which the organs have been received all over the world; with accounts of their triumphs at all the great comparisons of such instruments at World's Industrial Exhibitions for many years; with pictures of medals, decorations and diplomas of honor obtained.

In looking over such a catalogue one is forcibly reminded of the magnitude which the business of reed instruments has attained. Twenty-five years since only a few were made, under the name "melodeons," which had not and did not deserve much favor with musicians, enjoying very limited sale, at prices varying from $40 to $125. Now 80,000 organs are made yearly in the United States, which are sold in all civilized countries at prices from $22 to $1,000 or more.

This at least may be said to any purchaser of a Mason & Hamlin organ; he will unquestionably get the very best instrument of its class which can be made. Thirty years' experience is a guarantee of what this company can and will do. They cannot afford to send out poor organs.

The present catalogue shows an increased and very complete assortment, both as to cases and capacities. It will be sent free, to any one desiring to see it, on application to the Mason & Hamlin Organ and Piano Company, Boston, New York, or Chicago.—Boston Traveler.

THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER

Oh, say, can you see by the dawn's early light,
What so proudly we hailed at the twilight's last gleaming,
Whose broad stripes and bright stars thro' the perilous fight
O'er the ramparts we watched were so gallantly streaming;
And the rocket's red glare, the bombs bursting in air,
Gave proof through the night that our flag was still there.
Oh, say, does the star-spangled banner yet wave
O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave.

On the shore, dimly seen through the mists of the deep,
Where's the foe's haughty host in dread silence reposes,
What is that which the breeze, o'er the towering steep,
As it fitfully blows, half conceals, half discloses?
Now it catches the gleam of the morning's first beam,
In full glory reflected, now shines in the stream.
'Tis the star-spangled banner! Oh, long may it wave
O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave.

And where is that band who so vauntingly swore
That the havoc of war and the battle's confusion,
A home and a country should leave us no more!
Their blood has washed out their foul footsteps' pollution;
No refuge can save the hireling and slave
From the terror of flight or the gloom of the grave;
And the star-spangled banner in triumph shall wave
O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave.

Oh, thus be it ever when freemen shall stand
Between their loved home and war's desolation;
Blest with victory and peace, may the heaven-rescued land
Praise the power that hath made and preserved us a nation.
Then conquer we must, when our cause it is just,
And this be our motto: "In God is our trust."
And the star-spangled banner in triumph shall wave
O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave.

AN OLD WOMAN'S TALE.

It is an old tale, the experience of age striving in vain to temper the enthusiasm of youth. I am a mother now; and a sedate matron may well sigh to remember how she loved to think her old friends splenetic through infirmity, dearly as she loved them, rather than abate one atom of the fairy visions which danced around her.

And when the arch enchanter, Love, waved his wand, and bathed earth and sea and sky in hues of purple and gold, how cruel seemed the hand, though stretched in tenderest watchfulness, that would fain have brought her back to the sober hues of reality.

In the arrogance of youth, of beauty, we forget that our kind monitor has felt as we feel the same fond trust, the same ecstatic hope, and can say, "I, too, shepherd, in Arcadia dwelt."

I have never known the blessed care of a mother, but her venerable parent was permitted to watch over our orphaned childhood. I can now understand her earnest and prayerful anxiety, as we grew up to womanhood, and the time for our settling in life drew near.

I can feel with her now, though in my inexperience I could not then, for I, too, have fair girls to guard, whose happiness here and hereafter is entwined with my very heartstrings.

I remember the day on which my father told our grandmother of my engagement to your father. I was then, my Margaret, young and light-hearted as yourself, and dear grandmamma laid her withered hand on the curls which clustered in golden luxuriance, and tears dropped slowly down her venerable cheeks.

"Do not grieve, dear grandma; I shall not leave you for a long time yet; and," I added, pressing her hand in both of mine, "I shall see you very often."

Here my own tears began to flow, for in the engrossment of my new feelings I had scarcely dwelt on the severing of old ties, which my new engagement would involve.

"It is no selfish grief that thus afflicts me," said my beloved monitor. "I would not cloud your young spirits, nor dim the hopes which are said to bless the morning of life and fit us for the burden and heat of the day; but you, my Grace, remind me of my cherished daughter Agnes, whose early death you have often heard me lament. I will now tell you something of her life, and if it makes you rejoice with trembling and'd your present happiness, that happiness will be more likely to endure. From her infancy I had watched over Agnes with a more fearful tenderness than any other of my children. Hers was a character strangely made up of quick and joyous impulse, and deep, unsuspected feeling. She seemed altogether without that cowardice so often attributed to women as a reproach, but which, in a world of dangers, often serves her as well as the cautiousness of wisdom. Meanness and cunning she seemed, and the petty artifice so common in both sexes was never found in her. Her spirits were high and untamable—sometimes to wildness; but if unkindly or harshly rebuked, none so utterly subdued. Can you wonder, then, that I watched over her as if she were some precious vessel sent out on a sea full of rocks, quicksands and whirlpools? I used often to pray that, be her lot in life what it might be, she might ever feel the balm of loving looks and kind words."

"And what was her lot in life, dear grandmamma, and was she happy? Do tell me all about her. Was she pretty?"

"She was not so fair as her sister Grace," continued grandmamma; "but there was a variety in the play of her features, and a playfulness of manner, which made her generally admired. At the age of eighteen her hand was asked in marriage by a young merchant, Arthur Walforth, and before I was aware of her danger her heart was his. I say danger, because she was too young to encounter the cares of married life, and the uncertainties of trade press heavily on the wife of a merchant. She suffers from the variation of her husband's spirits, and she is a highly favored woman if his temper, too, do not suffer; and my Agnes' tender yet high spirit was, I knew, ill-fitted for such trials. Arthur was an intelligent young man, of high character, and most honorable in all his dealings. It was, however, his misfortune to have for a mother a weak and irritable woman, whom prosperity had not improved. She was surrounded with blessings but was constantly complaining, and as her education had not strengthened her mind, nor a watchful self-denial improved her heart, she was likely to impress upon her son's mind a very low opinion of all women. I, my dear Grace, was honored by my husband with his entire confidence, and I tried to return his trust by being indeed a helpmate for him. If a woman does not know the state of her husband's affairs she is defrauded of what is justly her due—the privilege of advising with him and of uniting with him in his efforts to do justly to all men. About a year after Agnes' marriage the crisis occurred in the commercial world which laid many lofty houses low. I often surprised Agnes in tears, but she said nothing to me; and I have always made it a principle not to inquire into family secrets. I have seen so much evil from the well-meaning but ill-judged reluctance which many a mother feels to give up to her daughter's husband, in good faith and sincerity, the secrets of that daughter's heart. But one day my Agnes came to my house and rushed upstairs to my bedroom. I followed her and secured the door; and I was then grieved to hear her sobbing bitterly and in an agony of sorrow.

"'Can I give you any comfort or advice, my darling? Confide in your mother, and perhaps I may be able to console you.'

"'Oh! my husband, my husband! He has used me cruelly; he has not been open with me; he might have told me the state of his affairs. I am not a child. I could bear poverty. I could live anywhere, and labor for him, as many are obliged to do; but this cruel reserve—oh, it will kill me!'

"'Agnes, my child,' I answered, 'now's your time of trial. You know where to look for strength; and oh, beware of a rebellious spirit! Strive to be patient and tell me all you fear.'

"'Our head clerk has just been to our house, mamma, and he tells me that his master has gone to London, and his return is uncertain; and he has left a request to me that I will come and stay with you until his affairs are arranged one way or other. I am more hurt by his allowing me to learn all this from a stranger than shocked at his ruin; for we are both young and may hope for better times. But oh, mother, there are many things which I might have done without, and now the people will suspect me of having known our circumstances all along, and I shall have the disgrace of being suspected of dishonesty.'

"'Alas! Agnes,' I said, 'yours is a common case. To a woman of integrity it is indeed a sore trial to be thought capable of wronging any tradesman; but do not injure your health by this violent grief. You are, whatever happens, our dearly beloved daughter, and now, for Grace's sake, and for your father's and mine, try to compose yourself.'

"I knew that this appeal to her family affection would have a strong effect on her generous nature; for Agnes, in becoming a wife, had not ceased to be a dutiful daughter; and her love for her sister, your dear mother, my Grace, was beautiful to behold.

"She was delicate even then, and required the tenderest care—too gentle and unselfish for the world. She was even then more like a heavenly than an earthly being.

"When she saw Agnes come down with the marks of tears on her cheeks, she strove by every tender attention to soothe and cheer her; and I sighed to see her gentle offices lavished in vain.

"Our dear Agnes was wounded to the quick by her husband's want of confidence, and we could not cheer her.

"In a short time, however, Arthur's affairs were wound up—all claims were satisfied, and he resumed his business with a good prospect of success; but he had lost one possession more valuable than gold—the confidence of his wife was gone forever.

"There was a restlessness and anxiety about Agnes which never left her. She refused ever again to take the most trifling thing on credit; and once, when he hesitatingly alluded to her prudence, as he termed it, she replied, 'I have been treated like a child, Arthur, and you must remember a burnt child dreads the fire. If I am not to be trusted, I will avoid being duped.'

"She died at the age of six-and-twenty, after a short illness; but I shall always think that her indignation and anguish of mind had paved the way for her early death."

My grandmother ceased, and seemed lost in thought; then she added, "You, too, Grace, are about to marry a merchant, and I have told you this sad story in order to impress upon your mind that the romantic feeling of first love is not sufficient to happiness in the married life. There must be mutual confidence, or the yoke will press heavily indeed on the helpless woman. Before you marry, make it a condition that no deception of any kind or degree be permitted between you. Unless a man confides in his wife he does both her and himself irreparable wrong."

I took my dear grandmother's advice, and, as far as this varied scene admits of happiness, happiness has been mine.

Injured in a Fight.

CLOTHIERS REFUSING TO GIVE SUSPENDERS WITH A SUIT OF CLOTHES.

A letter from Montana, Penn., says: This place has been the scene of a general fight, in which about fifty men, Hungarians and Polanders, participated, many of whom were seriously, if not fatally, injured. The resident Polish and Hungarian miners have been buying their clothing from a Hebrew clothier in a neighboring town. A large order had been given out some weeks ago, and the Hebrews came to Montana to deliver the goods. A dispute arose about some trifling matter, followed by a positive refusal on the part of the residents to take the clothing. The clothiers became indignant, and opened war on the inhabitants. The latter made a fierce attack on the Hebrews, taking their packs and stoning them out of town. About 2 o'clock in the morning the Hebrews returned to Montana accompanied by several officers, who proceeded to handcuff the Polanders and Hungarians. A few of them quietly submitted, but the others openly defied the authorities and refused to be taken into custody.

In the meantime about seventy-five of their friends attacked the officers, who were forced to surrender, leaving the attacking party masters of the situation. The officers retreated, but subsequently returned with reinforcements. Another attack was made on them and a general row was the result. The officers drew their revolvers and fired several shots into the crowd, and the latter sent a volley of stones and clubs down upon the officers, but without seriously injuring any of them. The officers fired a second time at the mob, which took effect. A ball entered the back of one of the crowd and he is fatally injured. About ten or twelve were seriously wounded, but the shooting had the effect of restoring peace, when those who had not escaped to the mountains were taken into custody and held for a hearing. An effort is now being made to secure the arrest of the entire party, many of whom are concealed in the woods, but the authorities expect to capture them. In speaking of the matter, the clothiers say the trouble grew out of their refusal to give a pair of suspenders with each suit of clothes.

Husband and Wife Separated.

A correspondent of the Madagascar Times says: If we are rightly informed we have to deplore another unnecessary and uncalled for departure from that international courtesy which should characterise such a chivalric nation as France. It appears that an American vessel lately put in at Tamatave, the captain's wife being seriously sick. One of the French doctors was accordingly summoned to attend the lady, and declared that the patient must be carried on shore if any hope was to be entertained for her recovery. The lady was carried in a boat in a most precarious condition, accompanied by the said doctor and her husband. As soon, however, as they approached the shore, the husband was forbidden to land, and no amount of entreaty could induce the authorities to forbear. He was thus obliged to return to his ship and leave his wife on shore. Three days pass, the husband is not allowed to see his wife, and at last the wife is dying and entreaties are again urged that husband and wife may see each other once more. The French officers are inexorable; the lady dies and is buried, and the broken hearted husband sets sail for Zanzibar.

Tamm is a young lady who lives next door to Blogg's house, and while Blogg had company the other evening she was heard in her endeavors to extort music from a piano. "Our neighbor's daughter is a very good player," remarked Blogg affably, during a pause in the conversation. "Her time is a little slow," was the critical response of Blogg's caller, who happened to be a connoisseur in music. "Yes," said Blogg, "her young man is there, and very likely she has set the clock back."

STORY OF THE OIL REGIONS

THE FAMOUS CITY OF PITHOLE AS IT WAS AND AS IT IS NOW.

Described by a Man who was There When Pithole Had 10,000 Inhabitants, and Went Back When it was Simply a Mud Hole.

The town of Pithole, in the oil regions of Pennsylvania, held up well for nearly a year, and began to fade. It went very suddenly. A few weeks before its decline the people were confident that the big wells could never cease to produce oil in immense quantities. The general confidence in the town was so strong that on Feb. 12, 1866, the Daily Record printed this:

The Record is now a fixed fact; and as long as a single hole shows signs of oil, or a derrick is visible, it will continue to make its appearance. While Oil City, Petroleum Centre, Tidioute, and other older and "so-called" livelier towns have been without a paper, Pithole, from its birth, has supported a daily paper, and is likely to do so for years to come.

What a vain boast that was I never realized fully until I visited the ruins of Pithole a few weeks ago. I had known, of course, that the oil wells had suddenly ceased to pour out their floods of petroleum; that the people had gone elsewhere to speculate, and that the erratic city had fallen into decay. But I was not prepared for what I saw when, in an endeavor to live the old days over again, I hired a saddle horse at Titusville and pushed my way through the almost forgotten country that leads to the Pithole valley. On the edge of a bluff, eleven miles from Titusville, I came upon an old man, shabby, decrepit, and weather-beaten, who sat upon a log at the upper edge of the field, with his bearded chin in his hands, looking vacantly down the still valley. He glanced up a moment to speak as I approached, and then resumed his doubled-up attitude.

"Lookin' for Pithole, stranger?" he asked. "If y' are, jest tie your gray to that saplin' there, an' come an' sit down here on this stick o' timber 'n look till you're tired."

"And this is—Pithole?"

"The same, my friend; or what there's left of it."

I had ridden eleven miles through mud and water, over rocks and logs, up hill and down, to see this—an old log cabin, the dismantled wing of an old hotel, and a lonely field upon which neither tree nor shrub would grow. And this was Pithole! I had left it teeming with busy people, bustling with business, and half mad with the excitement of wild speculation. Now, even nature had forsaken it, leaving only one half-crazed old man to guard its dust and ashes. The harmless old man had lived in peace and contentment on a little clearing on the site of Pithole all his life. The oil fever had found him poor, it had made him fabulously rich, and when it subsided it left him poorer than before, for it had wrenched his poor old mind off its bearings.

"What do you see?" I asked, seating myself beside the old man, and not letting him know that the landscape was by degrees becoming strangely familiar to me:

"What do I see?" said he slowly, without moving his eyes from the bare, brown valley. "I see a city full of people; I see a valley swarming with life and business, the smoke of countless furnaces, the steam from countless engines. I hear the clang of hammer and anvil, the roar of swift wheels, the rattle of cranks and bolts, the voices of busy men, the hum of industry.

"This," said the old man, laying his hand sorrowfully upon the rotten timber, "this is all that is left of the Bonta House, a noble structure. Down there, where you see a woodchuck burrowing, stood the Chase House, the best hotel in northwestern Pennsylvania. The Post Office occupied one of its big corners, and a noisy crowd of oil princes filled its scores of rooms. Right across the street, where a sapling grows, a murder was done, and just above is where the first woman in Pithole shot herself through the heart in a fit of remorse. Drink, some said, but I knew better. A short distance below—there's a cow munching dry grass there now—stood the Methodist church, dedicated with great pomp by Bishop Simpson, of Philadelphia; Dr. Loomis, President of Allegheny College, and the Rev. G. W. Maltby, Presiding Elder of the Jamestown District; never had a dollar of debt, as I know personally.

"Oh, yes, I can point 'em all out—banks, churches and theatres (there was Murphy's Theatre over that pool of water), machine shops, pipe line offices, the railroad station, hotels; there stood the Morey Farm Hotel, destroyed by fire by an incendiary. And the big oil wells. Why, over there among those new-grown bushes was the great Pool well, the pride of the town, the wonder of the whole country. It flowed for a time at the rate of 1,800 barrels a day! Then there were the old Frazier, good for 900 barrels a day; the big Grant well, 700 barrels; the Bartis, 300 barrels; the two Homestead wells; the Eureka, that produced 70,000 barrels all told; the famous Twin wells, No. 1 and No. 2, on the Thomas Holmden farm, and hundreds of others. The land all around here was covered as thick as trees with them. What do you see now? Here and there the blackened end of a length of iron casing sticking a foot above ground—that is all. Everything is gone now—buildings, derricks, tanks, machinery, tools, men and money. The town lasted two years, and then faded away, until to-day there is nothing left. I lived here almost alone when the town started, and I am living here alone now. Men have come and gone by thousands, but I have still remained true to the old place. Sometimes at night, when I am alone in my little old house down there, I live over the days of '65; I see the waves of speculation and strange innovation sweeping up against the solid door, only to ebb again, leaving the old house and me alone. Sometimes when I sit here the city rises up before me as of old, and the valley swarms with busy men.

"Going now, stranger? Well, it's always been that way with me. Walk your horse down this little path—it used to be a busy, howling street—and I'll show you where the buildings stood. I guess I'm the only man in the world that can guide you over the ruins of the city that he himself laid out and helped to build. Strange, isn't it? stranger than death. Well, the lower path's your best way out, I guess—old Titusville plank road you know. You'd better prod the gray a little; there's a big rainstorm coming. Good day."

Standing in the middle of his lonely field the old man watched me out of sight, and when the trees hid my horse he turned slowly and, climbing to his seat on the bluff, buried his grizzled face in his thin brown hands.

And that is the history of J. Nelson Tappan's town among the Pennsylvania Hills. No story of the past can be its equal.

ARCTIC WHALING.

How Wounded Whales Take Refuge in Ice Packs—Profits of the Catch.

According to a San Francisco paper while men who have been from childhood on terms of familiarity with harpoons, bomb lances and other paraphernalia with which leviathans are hunted, say that the present whaling season is uncertain. Whales appear to have been plenty in the ice, but many of them were where the ships could not go. Hundreds are said to have been seen spouting and slashing around, a sight suggestive of interest to landsmen, though barren in a commercial way.

The exasperating fact to the whalemen in the present season is that about as many whales are reported to have been lost after being "struck" as found their way to the try pots. Why this should be particularly exasperating is this: Whales average a yield of about one hundred barrels of oil each and not far from 1,800 pounds of bone. With bone quoted at $4 per pound, and likely to go higher if the season fails, the loss of one whale means the loss of several thousand dollars in bone alone.

One vessel reports having seen many dead whales. The explanation of this is that the whales were "struck" but the boat steerer's harpoon, and perhaps a bomb, were not fatal. When a whale starts for the [illegible] boat dragging after him, its speed being something terrific, it becomes necessary to cut loose when the sharp-pointed boat comes too near the pack. The leviathan keeps on under the ice, perhaps taking the iron and lines with him. When he dies and drifts out again the whaler will take him so long as there is blubber, but the oil is not so good. There is a little of the character of woodchuck hunting in Arctic whaling, which the present season well illustrates. The whale runs into the ice, as the woodchuck into a hole, and the whaler has to wait for the game to come out.

A steam whaler can go through four or five feet of pack ice, but when it grows thicker the obstacle becomes serious. "The fact is," said a mariner, speaking of the Arctic fleet, "that sailing vessels can generally do as well as the steamers in the early part of the season. But late in the season the steamers have the advantage for they can wait and yet get out."

Haven't Heard of Any.

The Hon. Crookshank Maxwell presented a resolution to the Lime-Kiln Club, to the effect that the President be requested to inform the club in an official manner whether any Presidential ticket bearing the names of colored people had been placed in the field this campaign. The resolution being seconded by half a dozen members, the President arose and replied:

"So fur as I hev bin able to l'arn, no ticket of de sort has bin planted. So fur as I kin l'arn, also, dar am no intention of bringin' out any sich ticket. Ise in no wise disappinted, however. It will be seb'ral y'ars yit befo' we shall be called upon to gav'm dis hentry, an' dearin' de interval it will be good policy to lay low an' take advantage of any circumstances dat may arise."

In the United States ever gets another navy, they should be more careful with it, and keep it away from sleeps and scows, and other dangerous vessels.—Punch.

A MURDER MYSTERY CLEARED UP.

The History of the Tragedy Found With a Skeleton at the Bottom of a Coal Shaft.

The clearing up of an old and forgotten murder mystery was effected in a most remarkable manner, a recent letter from Beaver Glen, W. Va., says.

About the year 1868 several abortive attempts to sink coal shafts along the river were made. One of these shafts was near Beaver Glen. It had been sunk about twenty-five or thirty feet, and abandoned. Soon after its abandonment, wild stories of unearthly sounds coming from its depths were circulated, but died out and were forgotten. The family living nearest to the abandoned shaft was that of John Ireland, who lived in a cabin which stood in a ravine a quarter of a mile away. Ireland was reported to be well off as wealth went in those days in mountainous regions. One of the men concerned in sinking the shaft, Ira Tompkins, hung about the neighborhood, spending much of his time at Ireland's. If any suspicion of his feelings toward Ireland's rather pretty wife existed, no one seemed to remember it. One day, after an alleged absence from the neighborhood, Tompkins reappeared at a neighbor's, saying he had just come from the Ireland cabin, where he found the three children dead on the floor and Ireland and his wife missing. The neighbors visited the cabin and saw evidences of a terrible struggle. Mrs. Ireland was afterward found in the woods, a short distance away, bound to a tree and gagged. She appeared to be greatly exhausted, although now it is remembered that she presented no evidence of having engaged in the struggle. She declared that in the night her husband had killed the children, and that she afraid aid to cry out for fear he would kill her. After killing the children he attacked her, but at her frantic prayer he spared her life, bound her to the tree and then disappeared. She declared that Ireland was undoubtedly crazy. As Ireland never returned her story was believed, and in course of time the tragedy was forgotten.

A year after Ireland's disappearance Tompkins and Mrs. Ireland were married. Quarrels were frequent, and one morning four years ago the woman was found dead in bed. Heart disease was said to be the cause. There was no outward evidence of foul play and so the matter ended. Tompkins left the country and has never been heard of since.

A party of boys were at the old shaft and one of them accidentally dropped his watch into it. A leafy limb was procured and the air in the shaft thoroughly stirred up to drive out foul air. Then a torch was made and, with the aid of a rope, the young fellow was let down. In groping about in the debris he was horrified to find a skull, and made an outcry. He was drawn up and the authorities were notified. They investigated and found portions of the skeleton of a man. In the search for something that would furnish a clue, an old copper tobacco box was found and in it badly scrawled was a history of the murder of the Ireland children written by Ireland. He declared that he had been attacked by Tompkins and his wife and left for dead. He revived sufficiently to see the murder of his children, but could render no aid. Afterward he was seized and dragged to the shaft hole and thrown in.

The story seems incredible, but James Wagner, an old resident says that he identified the tobacco box as one belonging to Ireland. He says that the writing is that of Ireland. The theory is that, after being thrown into the shaft, Ireland revived, and, knowing that he must die, wrote the history of the crime. Evidently Tompkins bound Mrs. Ireland to the tree to throw off all suspicion. It is now believed that Tompkins killed his paramour before he fled.

The Lead Pencil.

There is no lead pencil, and there has been none for fifty years. There was a time when a spiracle of lead, cut from the bar or sheet, sufficed to make marks on white paper or some rougher abrading material. The name of lead pencil came from the old notion that the products of the Cumberland mines, England, were lead, instead of being plumbago, or graphite, a carbonate of iron, capable of leaving a lead-colored mark. With the original lead pencil or slip, and with the earlier styles of the "lead" pencil made direct from the Cumberland mine, the wetting of the pencil was a preliminary of writing. But since it has become a manufacture the lead pencil is adapted, by numbers or letters, to each particular design. There are grades of hardness, from the pencil that may be sharpened to a needle point, to one that makes a broad mark. Between the two extremes there are a number of gradations that cover all the conveniences of the lead pencil. These graduations are made by taking the original carbonate and grinding it, and mixing it with a fine quality of clay in differing proportions, regard being had to the use of the pencil. The mixture is thorough, the mass is squeezed through dies to form and size it, is dried, and incased in its wood envelope.—Scientific American.

BUSINESS MUST BE DULL.

A country merchant caught a thief going through his cash drawer.

"Hello, there," he sang out, "what do you want in that drawer?"

"Oh, nothing," said the man, sheepishly, backing off and trying to get away.

"Well, don't let me disturb you. I've found the same thing there for the past six weeks."—Merchant Traveler.

HE WAS NO HOG.

A well-known hard coal player fell up against a well-developed faro game in Chicago, and during an unusually fierce and sanguinary argument with the tiger quit loser of about $1,600, which amount represented every cent he owned in the world. As he rose to leave the gilded arena, speculating the while on the condition of the walking between Chicago and Pittsburg, the dealer remarked in a cheerful manner. "Hold on a minute; we're going to have a little lunch of cold ham, etc., in a few minutes. Won't you join us?"

"Join you," roared the victim of the combat, as he turned on his heel with an air of disdain and quit the place; "do you think I can eat $1,600 worth of ham."

NO MORE, NO MORE.

"Pa," remarked young Johnnk Jarphley, "was Jonah a great man?"

"I do not know that he was a great man, my son," cautiously remarked Mr. Jarphley, "but he certainly was a very remarkable one."

"He lived in a whale's belly for forty days, didn't he, pa?"

"Something of the sort is recorded, I believe."

"Could you do it?"

"I don't know. I am reading—Don't bother me."

"But, say, pa—I believe you could. I heard ma say you was a regular Jonah in everything you undertook, and—ouch! oh! oh! oh! I won't do so no more!"—Pittsburg Telegraph.

A PERFECT PRESERVATIVE.

Mr. Runaround was out late the other night, and the next morning at breakfast, in order to "justify" himself, he remarked to his wife:

"Pet, we have been married twenty years, and you look almost as young as you did then."

"You have not changed a particle," she responded, sweetly.

"Not changed!" he answered in surprise, remembering his gray locks and ruby nose.

"Why, how can you say that?"

"Because things preserved in alcohol never change," she answered.

Mr. R. buttered his napkin ring, under the impression that it was a muffin, and the meal progressed in silence.—Washington Hatchet.

A QUEER COUNTRY.

"You Americans are a queer lot," vouchsafed a newly arrived Englishman. "Last night I overheard a young woman remark to her escort as they left the theatre:

"'Isn't he an elegant actor?'

"A few moments later another young woman said:

"'Do look at the moon, George dear, isn't it elegant?'

"This morning as I passed a grocery store the clerk said to a customer:

"'Cabbages, sir? Yes, sir; a fresh lot just in. There is an elegant cabbage, sir.'"

LIKES A SEWING MACHINE.

"Mamma," said a young fellow to his mother, "why is kissing a pretty girl like a sewing machine?"

The mother looked up from her work and replied:

"Why, what a silly question! There is no earthly resemblance."

"Oh, yes there is, too," he replied, "a very close resemblance."

"Well, why is it?"

"Because it seams good."—Graphic.

A STORY.

I'll tell you a story, mamma,
I'll "make it up," you know—
There once was a little princess,
Lived years and years ago.

Her mother loved and loved her,
And never made her mind,
And let her eat the cookies,
And—oh, was awful kind.

She stayed up late like grown folks,
Her mother liked her to,
And—won't you make this story
Come just exactly true?

CHILTON VIEW.

Published Every Thursday Morning.

CLANTON, ALA., OCT. 23, 1884.

There are no editors in the Alabama penitentiary. An exchange says that the other professions are not so fortunate in keeping out, the law, the ministry and even the medical fraternity being represented. Wonder how the editors manage to escape? Perhaps the penitentiary people don't like deadheads.

Gov. O'Neal received Tuesday a dispatch from Director General Burke, of the World's Exposition, informing him of the payment to Commissioner Pratt, of the second installment of the amount—$5,000—donated to Alabama by the managers of the exposition; which generous donation will enable our State to make a creditable exhibit at New Orleans.—Florence Gazette.

Blaine's mansion in Washington is the largest ever built in the city. It is 70x75 feet. It has more rooms that the British legation. It is now rented to a retired Chicago merchant at $13,000 per year. Mr. Blaine is evidently a very frugal and thrifty man to be able to build such a house and accumulate about $1.00,000 besides, on a salary of $5,000 per year and at the same time rear and educat a large family. Mr. Blaine is one of the few men who have made politics pay.

Although there are few tongues that are not represented in newspaper literature, an enormous majority are published in four languages. As a matter of course, English heads the list, inasmuch as English-speaking races have peopled North America and Australasia. The German races rank second, the French third, the Spanish fourth; but inasmuch as the latter tongue is the privileged one in Mexico and South America, it is probable it will find a more extensive circulation in print as these nations advance. Meanwhile the proportion is as follows: English, 16,500 publications; Germany, 7,350; French, 3,850; Spanish, 1,650.

The Political Pot.

Less than two weeks hence is the Presidential election. Though the Republican press is holding a devil's jubilee over the result in Ohio, yet it is evident upon comparison of the cold, plain figures that their jubilation is a mere "bluff game." Garfield carried Ohio by 36,000 majority. Blaine has carried it by less than 12,000. In West Virginia the Democrats do not decrease their majority as the Republicans do their majority in Ohio, but they increase it, and, in a spite of Blaine's speeches and Republican money bags, sweep the state. The Ohio idea of money first, last and all the time does not seem to have worked well in West Virginia.

In November Illinois, Kansas and Nebraska will be debatable states, while the odds will be in favor of the Democrats in Wisconsin. An army of so-called Marshals, sworn in under the pretense of protecting the ballot box, but used to override and intimidate qualified voters, has justly brought about a revulsion in feeling at the methods of the present Republican leaders. Cincinnati, the most lawless city on the continent, is not only a plague spot of the country, but is likely to prove as much to the Republican party. Even Illinois is organizing to meet and frustrate the vile methods of U. S. Marshals.

The solid South with New York and Indiana, and without the aid of any other doubtful State, will elect the next President.

The New York Tribune is the only prominent daily journal in the metropolis that is supporting Blaine. The Herald, Times, Evening Post, Harper's Weekly and Puck, all of which supported Garfield are now striking hardly blows for Cleveland and honest government. And of the Boston daily papers only one is supporting Blaine. On the whole, the outlook is auspicious for a national Democratic victory in November.

How Ohio was Carried.

The Montgomery Advertiser of Saturday says: A carload of negroes reached this city yesterday from Cincinnati where they voted Tuesday last, although these colored patriots lived in Kentucky. It is supposed they scattered in various directions after reaching Montgomery. They were provided with return tickets and half money to digest from justice.

THE PENITENTIARY.

Net Cash Receipts—Number and health of Convicts.

Warden of the penitentiary J. H. Bankhead, on yesterday, paid into the State treasury $15,880 01, the amount due for the quarter ended Sept. 30th. The amount which the warden paid in for the two years ended Sept. 30th aggregate $70,128.79. These figures, of course, refer to the net cash receipts from the penitentiary, the expenses of the inspectors, physician, and so on, having been paid out of the gross receipts. The net receipts from the penitentiary for the two years ended September 30th, 1882, was only 50,000 dollars, the increase in two years being $20,128.79.

The convicts number 517, of which 200 are in the employ of Comer & McCurdy, 165 with the Pratt Coal and Iron Company, 80 with Hon. Thomas Williams, 50 with Jackson, at Blount Springs, and the remainder inside the penitentiary walls at Wetumpka. There have been very few escapes within the past year, and most of those who have escaped from time to time have been recaptured.

Warden Bankhead on yesterday said to an Advertiser reporter:

"The health of the convicts is excellent. The typhoid fever recently reported at the Pratt Company's shaft prison has entirely disappeared. There has been no death from sickness in two months, and since the completion of our prison improvements on the first of January the health of the convicts has been good at all times; couldn't have been better"

"The number of convicts is gradually decreasing from year to year," said Mr. Bankhead. "Crime is on the decrease or the counties are keeping their criminals. At any rate fewer are being sent to the penitentiary."—Adv.

Death of Col. R. H. Powell.

UNION SPRINGS, Oct. 15.

Hon. Richard H. Powell died suddenly this evening of congestion. The funeral will take place Friday.

The following is from Brewer's history of Alabama, printed in 1872. After this sketch was written Col. Powell served several terms in the legislature as a member from Bullock county, one of them as Senator. He was a member elect to the Lower House at the time of his death. He was a journalist of distinction, being senior editor of The Union Spring Herald. Brewer's history says:

Richard Holmes Powell, of this (Bullock) county, is a well known citizen of this State. He was born in Monticello, Jasper county, Nov. 2nd, 1821. His father was a physician, and a native of Virginia, who often represented Talbot county, Georgia, in the Senate of that State, and who brought his family to Alabama in 1839. His mother was a daughter of Rev. Richard Holmes. The son was educated at Emory and Randolph-Macon colleges, and was the fellow-student at the latter of Lomax, Dowdell, Clopton, and Benagh, all familiar names in this State. He settled permanently in the part of Macon now embraced in Bullock in 1843. Here he was a planter, but took an active interest in social and political questions. In 1852 he was Grand Worthy Patriarch of the Sons of Temperance in the State. When the war between the States commenced, he led a company into the service in time to become part of the third infantry regiment raised in Alabama. He served as Captain through the bloody campaigns of Virginia, until after Gettysburg, when he became Major, and afterwards Lieutenant Colonel of the brave Third Alabama Infantry. At the close of the struggle, he was elected to the Senate from Macon, and served two years in this body. He was licensed as a lawyer in 1867, having reviewed the studies of his youth, and now practices in Union Springs. Col. Powell is a gentleman of cultivated mind, literary attainments, stainless integrity, agreeable and affable manners, and earnest but moderate opinions. As an officer he was a favorite with his command. He married a sister of Col. Homer Blackman of this county.

Howard College.

MARION, ALA., Oct. 18, 1884.

EDITOR AND READERS OF THE VIEW: In accordance with our promise to accept the genial "Ed.'s" invitation, so cordially extended, to utilize a moderate space of the correspondent's column, we will proceed to furnish a little extra material for the over worked typo.

In the characteristic phraseology of the Ethiopian epistle, we must first say that we are well and doing well at the time being present. We have been here but a short time, barely sufficient to give us a definite idea of college life, and of course we cannot be expected to do more than localize within the bounds of our letter head.

The college opened on the first instant with a fine representation of the brain and muscle of Alabama youth just budding into manhood. President Murfee does not confine his work to literary and classical training. His great power is in his knowledge of human nature. He comes in contact with every student; his strong abhorrence of everything that tends to lower the standard of morality among young men; and lastly in his thoroughly practical course of study.

The first thing impressed on the mind of the student is the moral requirements of the code of honor by which the college is governed. No student who has not mastered his text books can receive his diploma. In short, President Murfee inculcates every manly trait among his students; and the results speak in strong terms of approval. His students love him because they know that everything is done for their good. He is also doing a good work in the education of our ministry. He offers every inducement in his power to worthy young men entering the ministry. This turns our thoughts into another channel.

The Baptists of Alabama are waking up to the importance of ministerial education. A board has been organized and has the matter in hand. A mess hall has been opened. The ladies of different churches have contributed money to fit up the several rooms. Verbena ladies contributed the money for one room. We would here thank our lady friends of Verbena for this token of their remembrance; and while the rooms have not been named in honor of the churches furnishing them, we will regard ours as the Verbena room. The ladies of Ebenezer church also raised the money for one room, but as the rooms were already furnished, the money was contributed to the support of the Unity Association beneficiary. We have here now fifteen theologues and expect a large addition in the near future. Ten board at the minister's home and five at the college.

We have some fine material in our young ministry and an education is what they need to make them powers in the pulpit. I do not wish to leave the impression on your readers that Howard College is an exclusive school for theologues. We have many young men of talent preparing for practical work in secular life. This is a practical as well as a literary school, and we regret that Chilton has not a good representation. Mr. Sydney McMath, formerly of Chilton, but now of Shelby, is all that can be named in honor of our county. The military training is a great benefit to young men in physical development and etiquette.

It is customary with Howard correspondents to say something of the Judson, but as we have yet to make an acquaintance with this famous institution and its fair inmates, we will leave something to be said in a future letter. All omitted Greek and Latin phrases will be kindly supplied by the indulgent reader. BIJOU.

Gratefulness.

Mr. H. Sampsel, Ottawa, Kansas, writes: "DR. S. B. HARTMAN & CO., Columbus, O.—Gentlemen: I have suffered for seven years; have tried everything and many physicians, and all have failed. I went to Pittsburgh, and while there fell on the street, my breath seemed to leave my lungs, and numbness overpower me. I determined to give PERUNA and MANALIN a fair trial. I used four bottles of each, and my trouble left, never, I hope, to return. I left Pittsburgh three weeks ago for Kansas, and thought, as I was going to a new country, I had better take a bottle of MANALIN with me, on account of bad water, etc. I arrived here with one-half bottle. I found one of my friends in a pretty bad condition. The doctors were treating her for chills and fever. I did not know what her trouble was, though I persuaded her to use the MANALIN. She did so, and the first day she was up doing her work. Now this seems strange, but it is, nevertheless, a candid truth. She used it all, and has never had cause to lie down during the day since she took the first three doses."

A Case that was Pronounced Incurable.

Miss C. C. Peck, 714 Jackson street, Milwaukee, Wis., writes: "DR. S. B. HARTMAN & CO.—Gentlemen: I take great pleasure in stating to you the benefit I received from your valuable PERUNA. I have been suffering for about fifteen years with a severe cough and bronchitis (so the doctors call it). I was treated by different physicians, and spent considerable money for different kinds of patent medicines, but received no benefit whatever. Dr. Fox, of this city, claimed I had consumption, and there was no hope for me ever getting better. I was so bad that I coughed almost continually. Mrs. Henry Ellis, a friend of mine, induced me to try your PERUNA. I am happy to say I began to notice a change after I had taken my second bottle. I took eight bottles in all, and now I feel like a new woman. If it hadn't been for PERUNA I think I would be in my grave now. It is a wonderful remedy, and I recommend it to all my friends."

Messrs. Baker Bros., Mt. Vernon, O., write: "Your PERUNA sells well. Customers speak of it as being a good medicine."

Mr. Daniel R. Spry, Portsmouth, O writes: "I have a good trade in PERUNA. It sells well and gives satisfaction."

Miss Hallie Ray has returned to Clanton after a short stay at her home in Montgomery. She will resume her school east of Clanton.

The protracted meeting at the Methodist church closed on last Friday night. Several conversions were made during the last few nights.

A new saw mill is going up three miles northwest of Clanton. A new 16x20 Atlas engine arrived Friday for the mill. Mr. Robert Hunt is the proprietor.

"A Friend" sends us some dots from Maplesville which we would gladly publish, but are compelled to withhold as the name of the writer is not furnished. Those who are not regular correspondents should remember this rule.

The merchants of Clanton failing to take advantage of the facilities offered by their local paper as an advertising medium, the merchants of neighboring towns and localities have taken nearly all of the VIEW's available advertising space.

Several large wall maps of the United States and the World are offered for sale cheap. It is the Gunison matchless historical, county, railroad, distance and index map of the U. S. and illustrated reference map of the world. Apply at this office.

Democratic tickets for the Presidential election are at this office for distribution, and will be sent out to the chairmen of the beat committees by hand or mail, if they cannot find time to call for them.

Our young friend Oscar Ward, will leave us soon. He has arranged to teach school in what is known as the Mullins neighborhood, in Chilton county. His school is made for ten months, opens on next Monday, the 20th inst. Wherever Oscar may go, he has our best wishes for his prosperity. And from what we know of his past life, we take great pleasure in recommending him as a good teacher.—Bibb Blade.

But one more issue of the VIEW before the election. After the election we hope to hear from our local correspondents very regularly, as there will be no political news worth talking about, and all hands can turn attention toward the development and upbuilding of our particular section. We want to hear from every neighborhood in the county as to what is going on, what improvements are being made and what in prospect.

Messrs. Allen, Scott & Sherrod, wholesale grocers and dealers in grain and hay, at Birmingham, have a new advertisement in the VIEW in which the attention of the merchants of this section is called. This firm sells only to dealers, and does a wholesale business exclusively.

Our Maplesville correspondent writes: "Colds prevalent on account of sudden change in the weather. Dust abundant and wagon tires still loose. J. M. Kailin is now at Howard College fitting himself for the ministry. Joe is a talented young man and we predict for him a high future."

Verbena Views.

Nearly all the Summer resorters have returned to their homes.

Mr. C. A. Lanier and wife have returned to their home in Montgomery.

Mr. T. Henry Motley, of Anniston, Ala., has been stopping for some weeks at the Clifton House. He left last Sunday for San Antonio, Texas, where he goes with the hope of improving his present state of ill health. That his trip may be beneficial to him is the sincere wish of his many friends in Verbena.

Col. Jno. C. Graham, of Montgomery, is stopping at the Clifton House. Col. Graham is one of the largest cotton buyers in the United States, with offices in Montgomery, New York and Liverpool.

Mr. J. M. Cody, of Columbia, Ala., is going to locate among us. He will superintend the getting of cross ties for Mr. J. F. Thornton.

Messrs. J. F. Thornton and J. M. Cody have gone on a visit to Cincinnati. They went via the Queen & Crescent route.

Mr. Chas. L. Reid has returned from his visit to the Southern Exposition at Louisville.

The circus was here in full force last Saturday. It drew the largest crowd Verbena has ever seen. They did not have many animals but their acting was splendid. They give a good show and deserve the patronage of the show going public.

Capt. J. L. Tiernan, who sometime since removed his family from this place to Atlanta, has returned them to the old reliable "Clifton House." That is a feather in the cap of the Clifton House and Verbena. Some of the young men were delighted at the return of the family, on account of again placing in their midst their lovely daughter, Miss Katie.

Callierville Dots.

Callierville is improving. Mr. Wash Broadhead has moved his store back and is putting a new front to it.

Messrs. Adams & Callier have had a side-walk of plank laid beginning from their gate and extending over the bad places of sand. We see from the VIEW that the firm has changed from Adams & Callier to T. E. Callier & Son. The firm is an honest one and deserves the patronage of all.

Dr. Callier has been confined to his bed for several days, by sickness and has been dangerously ill, but we hope he will recover soon. Dr. Armistead Callier is attending him.

The railroad, notwithstanding its being a great blessing to us, is some disadvantage also, in killing stock and burning a great deal of fencing. Mr. Perry McGee had a quantity of fencing burned the other day. It caught from the sparks of a passing enging.

Spanish Interest in American Politics.

This a translation of an article in a Madrid paper:

"Since some weeks the contest presidential rages in the United States of North America, with the usual confusion and opprobrium. The Gen. Jimblaine of the Federalists offers himself with much acrimony and the usual Democratic violence to the Senor Dr. Cleveland of the Province of Hendricks. The pronouncements in the conflict have already been numerous and irritating to the public peace of the United States. On the part of the Gen. Jimblaine a heavy impost of forced payments has been laid by the Federal army on the entire commerce of the country. In the State of Coney Island there have been several serious revolutions in consequence. It is one of the humors of the conflict that Gen. Jimblaine is called the cavalier of the white feather to commemorate his behavior when the Confederate General Jacksonlee menaced the capital Washington."

Drought in South Carolina.

COLUMBIA, Oct. 17—From many parts of upper South Carolina come reports of an unprecedented drouth. The water courses are failing, and the effects on vegetation are being seriously felt. In many localities no rain has fallen in eight weeks. The temperature is remarkably warm for the season, in consequence of which cotton is opening more rapidly than the planters can have it gathered. Several large streams have dried up, and a number of mills have been forced to stop for want of water. In some localities peach and apple trees are in bloom again. An apple orchard in Lancaster county has produced three crops of fruit this year. Altogether the season is one of the most remarkable ever known in South Carolina.

PLAGUE SCENES IN NAPLES

CAUSED IGNORANCE AND GREAT FAITH THAT ABOUND.

Archbishop Says the King—Good He Has Done—Affairs at La Spezia, and in Russia—Improvements in France.

[Special Dispatch to the N. Y. Times]

The exodus from Naples during the past week has been so great that lodgings in the neighboring villages are obtained only at fabulous prices. Sometimes as high as 500f a month for a single room is demanded. The better sections of the town are deserted and all the shops in the Toledo are closed at 4 in the afternoon. The theatres are all shut. Many of the poorer streets are as silent as death. Even the cafes are closed, and the only sign of life is the joiners hammering the rough coffins together. In some of the streets absolutely everybody is either dead or is sick. In one street—the Via Duchessa—thirty cases occurred in a single house. The smell of burned sulphur is everywhere, and the wretched people of the poorer quarters are either stupefied or frantic. Meanwhile the devotion and daring of the King and the Archbishop have had the effect of dispelling somewhat the superstition about poison and allaying the class hatred which raged at first. But the public morale is still worse than it is possible to describe. A mob attacked in the Via del Purgatorio a man whom they suspected of throwing poisonous powder over some cakes exposed for sale on the piazza, dragged him back and made him eat the cake until the owner murdered in self-defence. Out of sheer perversity the people eat more fruit and vegetables than usual. In the piazza in front of the Municipal Palace two loafers got a big basket of figs and in the presence of a large crowd began to eat them on a wager. The police marched them off to jail. A woman who was selling fruit on the corner of the Piazza del Martini fell over dying of the cholera. The crowd made a bonfire of her chair, stand, and fruit, and then left her to die. Nobody would carry her to the hospital.

Although the disease is generally of a mild character compared with the numbered cases, there are many instances like the foregoing of its startling suddenness. Several people have already fallen down in the streets and been carried off dead. A lady who was taken with vomiting during mass died before she reached home. The terrors of the plague have been intensified by the scoundrelly action of the butchers, who trebled the price of meat as soon as the panic began, but the King was followed in his carriage by a mob of women shrieking to have the price of meat reduced, and the officials accordingly took steps to import cattle and reduced prices. People in the slums still defy the laws boldly. The body of a woman was buried in the little garden of her home, and when the police arrested the husband a great mob threatened to rescue him. Under the inspiration of the Archbishop the priests are now exerting every effort to discourage processions and the like, though with little success.

There has been an enormous revival of religious sentiment in Naples. The street shrines which were walled up by Garibaldi in 1860 have all been opened, and the whitewash scraped off the holy pictures. Crowds wild with joy watch the work and hail with shouts each restoration. The processions are confined in the poorest streets, chiefly by women. The churches are thronged and street altars are erected. The police do not dare interfere with the altras. Almost extravagant stories of miracles worked are received with credulity by the populace. The hospital and ambulance system have been overpowered by the awful increase in deaths, and for a day or two it has been necessary to leave corpses waiting so long that they became putrid, thus adding vastly to the contagion. The situation in this respect, however, has been improved by the King's ordering the military to give assistance. Scores of old omnibuses covered with black have been converted into hearses.

The heroism of King Humbert makes the most welcome royal picture Europe has looked on for years. The King is accompanied always by his brother Amadeus. He has visited all the hospitals and the afflicted quarters, scattering money and kind words right and left. He wished to explore the Fondaici, containing probably the most hideous human habitations in Christendom, with its narrow courtyards, its houses eighty feet high, the sunlight and air excluded, and the filthiest rooms, each with a dozen or fifteen inmates of both sexes. There is no water there to wash with; the place is alive with vermin; it is a literal sink of pestilence, and contains fully one-fourth of the whole population of Naples. All efforts to dissuade the King from going had failed, when a despairing official cried out: "You have no right to commit suicide. Nor have you a right to deliberately murder many of these unfortunate people who will follow you even into that hotbed of death!"

Upon this the King bowed and got into his carriage again. All [illegible] becoming demoralized as the horror grows, but there can be no doubt that the King's example has had an effect of preventing what would have otherwise been a fearful panic. The Italian people are almost crazy with enthusiasm for the King, and the Catholic newspapers vie with the democratic ones in lauding his course to the skies. The King and Archbishop have fraternized from the start, and the feeling is general that a rapprochement between the Church and State is nearer to-day than before in many years. The total number of deaths in Naples is now considerably over 3,000. All have occurred since August 20. Naples passed Toulon on the 9th and Marseilles on the 11th in its ghastly record of deaths, and is another week, at the present rate, it will have to [illegible]

A FAMOUS AND UNIQUE PAPER.

Paper Used by the Bank of England—It Cannot be Counterfeited.

The paper used for printing the Bank of England notes has always been made by the Portal family, whose ancestor came over from Bordeaux, after the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, bringing with him the art of making fine paper, which, like those of silk weaving and dyeing scarlet, was up to that time unknown in England. Except by burglary, it is absolutely impossible to obtain a scrap of the beautifully watermarked paper produced at the mill at Laverstoke. Every piece of this paper is registered before it is removed from the frame, an account is kept by a locked dial, and every damaged note is accounted for before being ground up again into pulp. Mr. Portal's paper has a potential value, quite apart from its worth merely as paper, for it has always been regarded as so essential to a passable forgery that the world at large felt perfectly easy regarding any attempts to impose on them through the medium of the Bank of England. This paper—it is, perhaps, needless to tell any one—is quite unique. Tested by touch, it emits a crisp, crackling, sharp sound, and in color it has been described as "neither blue-wove, nor yellow wove, nor cream-laid, but white, of a hue that can be compared with no other white." The three deckled edges show the natural boundary of the pulp when first moulded. The fourth is left smooth by the knife which cuts the notes in twain. The paper is tough—so tough, indeed, that after the addition of one grain of size, it will hold a weight of sixty pounds without tearing. Yet the quantity of fibre in a five-pound note is not more than eighteen and a half grains, and the sheet is so thin that erasures are oftentimes found to be extremely difficult.

But what constitutes the main safeguard of the Bank is the "water," or, more properly, the wire "mask," that transparent design which can be instantly detected when the paper is held up between the eye and the light. This crevice is obtained, as all water-marks are, by twisting wires to the desired shape, and sticking them on the face of the mould, so that when the pulp settles down it must of necessity be thinner on the wire design than on the other parts of the sheet. The water is then permitted to run through the sieve-like face of the mould, and the sheet of paper in embryo "couched" by the mould being gently but firmly pressed upon a blanket to which this spongy sheet clings. Sizing is a subsequent process, so that when dry the water-mark is plainly seen.—Paper World.

Diamonds Without an Owner.

In the bond vault of the Treasury, says a Washington letter, is a quantity of diamonds and other precious stones which have a queer history. Their value is variously estimated at from $50,000 to $100,000. There is a bottle four or five inches long filled with glistening diamonds, and besides these a large number of separate stones of various kinds. Some of them are set in beautiful gold ornaments intended for personal wear. Most of them have been in the custody of the Treasury officials for forty-five years. These were sent to President Van Buren in 1839 by the Imam of Muscat, a country of Asia, as a testimonial in recognition of some service to that country by his administration. Just what it was nobody appears to know. Van Buren could not accept them for himself, although it was the desire of the donor that he should do so, by reason of the clause in the Constitution which forbids any person connected with the Government accepting any present or decoration from any foreign power or potentate. To have returned them would have been an insult to the royal giver, and what to do with them was a question that puzzled the Presidential mind. They were finally turned over to the Treasury and there they remain unto this day. The entire collection has accumulated in a similar way.

Other presents were sent to Government officers by kings and princes, who had not read the Constitution of the United States, and nothing could be done with them except to stow them away in the vault. They do not have any definite owners, and they bear about the same relation to the Government that unclaimed packages do to an express company.

Lady Cashiers.

The Buffalo Express has made investigations in its city and speaks an emphatically good word in favor of lady cashiers. It cannot find a case in which one of them has ever been justly accused of embezzlement. One retailer said that the cashiers were invariably honest, but occasionally a female clerk had been detected in pilfering small articles—collars, handkerchiefs, and the like—but the cases are rare. A leading dry goods dealer said: "I never knew a woman who handled other people's money to steal one cent. I have employed women cashiers for years. They are quicker at making change than men; they will detect counterfeit money quicker; they keep their cash accounts clearer, and they don't want to run the whole store, as men do."

FAIR HONOUR.—"Anything that involves or includes betting, whether it be the result of a contest between horses or the result of a contest between candidates for the Presidency, I object to," says Mr. Robert Bonner, and he adds: "I have always maintained that a gentleman can own and drive a good horse without being obliged to wager money on what the animal can accomplish." This is sound sense, says the N. Y. Times, and Mr. Bonner will have the thanks of a great many "gentlemen who own and drive good" horses for the practical manner in which he has adhered to his convictions, also for the intention he manifests to give Maud S. a chance [illegible]

A SQUEEZED LEMON.

Mrs. Lincoln Proposes to Have a Full Investigation of the Greely Expedition.

It is understood at the War Department in Washington that Secretary Lincoln proposes to anticipate what will certainly be the action of Congress, by making a thorough investigation of the horrors of the Greely Expedition. He has not yet decided upon what course to pursue, nor has he even announced that such is his intention, but those who know him best and understand his methods say that the Greely business will be a squeezed lemon before Congress meets, and that the facts will all be before the public in a form that cannot be questioned. It is now understood that the details of the Expedition are more frightful than was at first imagined. It is believed that others besides Henry were shot. Lieutenant Greely was advised at Portsmouth to tell the whole story at once, and the friends who gave him this advice were earnest in the matter. It was claimed that if the worst were known now, the excitement would die out and when the report went before Congress, the whole truth having been known, the excitement would be slight; but if a more horrible story went before Congress than the public had been led to imagine, the whole disgusting details of the terribly sad affair would have to be gone over again. Lieutenant Greely thought, and still thinks, differently. He claims that the public has no interest in the matter and nothing to do with it. What it learns will be simply that which it is impossible to keep back.

Secretary Lincoln feels as the friends of Lieutenant Greely did, that it is best to have the whole matter over with now, that it may be forgotten as soon as possible. Army officers generally agree with him.

It has been rumored that some of the records of the party's experience at Cape Sabine have been destroyed or lost since the rescue, and it is admitted that the diary of one of the men in which the story of cannabalism was detailed with distressing minuteness has been lost. One explanation is that it was thrown overboard by accident from one of the relief vessels, and another is that it was burned accidentally, but it is suspected that its contents were such as to cause no sorrow at its loss among those connected with the expedition. Enough is left, in the way of papers, notes and diaries to make a most saddening and sickening story.

Secretary Lincoln said that the reason he ordered Sergeants Brainard, Long and Connell, of the Greely party, to Portsmouth was that he did not consider it becoming to an officer of the army to exhibit himself in a museum with the living skeleton and the fat woman at 10 cents a peep. It is said that all the enlisted men engaged in the expedition will be discharged and placed on the pension roll as soon as the proper authority for this can be found. It is claimed that while the men must not be blamed for sustaining life under any circumstances, the fact of their cannibalism will militate against them and subject them to annoyances if they remain in the army, and it has been decided that this is the best way out of the difficulty.

The Fire Record.

ORIGIN OF THE FIRE AT CLEVELAND.

It has come to be the generally accepted theory, that the disastrous fire in Cleveland, Ohio, was the work of an incendiary. The deed is charged to various classes of citizens. A letter from Cleveland says: A short time ago a number of tramps were arrested by an officer; on complaint of the watchman, who found them camping in one of the alleys. Revenge for this may have excited some of the craft to fire the lumber. A theory has gained ground among a few interested persons, laying the deed at the door of one or more of the employees of Wood, Perry & Co. It has been reported that on Saturday night the firm gave notice of a reduction in wages to 90 cents in the cases of a portion of their force. The men were considerably stirred up in consequence, and one of them, it is stated, said in determined manner: "Well, if you won't pay $1 a day you shan't pay 90 cents," and he left. The fire occurred the next night. There are not wanting plenty of men who believe some of the workmen were engaged in it, as the flames were discovered on the north side of Carter street, and they argue that this place was fired first because the men knew that the firm had no insurance on that part of the lumber and it being also near the river and the bridge, too, it would be easy to get away. A reporter called at the office of the firm and inquired if the report that they had reduced the wages of the employees to 90 cents was true. The answer was that they desired to say nothing about the matter at present. Those who do not entertain these theories contend that a spark from one of the tugs plying on the river would doubtless fire the lumber which had an excellent chance to dry under the hot sun of the past two weeks.

Female Ushers.

A New York theatre employs female ushers who look like the most demure and circumspect French nurses one sees in the parks. They wear black dresses, white frilled caps and long white nurse's aprons. The idea of employing female ushers is borrowed from Europe. In London and Paris all the theatres employ them. In Paris the kind of seat the spectator gets depends upon the impression he makes upon the lady usher. The best chairs are not numbered, but direct the purchaser to a certain section of chairs. If the usher is satisfactorily tipped she picks out the best seat in the section. In London the girls distribute bills of the play and get a sixpence for each bill. Not to give the sixpence is interpreted as the bill, if each an omission ever occurred, would be considered outrageous.

Incidents of a Wedding Excursion.

I was married in India. I engaged for our honeymoon a little house—sixteen miles or so from any other habitation of white men—that stood on the steep white cliffs of the Narbadda River, which here flowed through a canyon of pure white marble. Close beside our house was a little hut, where a holy man lived in charge of an adjoining shrine, earning money for himself and the shrine by polishing little pieces of marble as mementoes for visitors. It was a wonderful place altogether, and, while my wife went in to change her dress, the servants laid breakfast on the veranda over-looking the river. At the clatter of the plates there began to come down from the big tree that over-shadowed the house, and up the trees that grew in the ravine behind it, from the house-roof itself, from everywhere, a multitude of solemn monkeys. They came up singly and in couples, and in families, and took their places without noise or fuss on the veranda, and sat there, like an audience waiting for an entertainment to commence. And, when everything was ready, the breakfast all laid, the monkeys all seated, I wentin to call my wife.

"Breakfast is ready, and they are all waiting," I said.

"Who are waiting?" she asked, in dismay, "I thought we were going to be alone, and I was just coming out in my dressing gown."

"Never mind," said I. "The people about here are not very fashionably dressed themselves. They wear pretty much the same things all the year round."

And so my wife came out. Imagine, then, her astonishment. In the middle of the veranda stood our breakfast table, and all the rest of the space, as well as the railings and the steps, was covered with an immense company of monkeys, as grave as possible and as motionless and silent as if they were stuffed. Only their eyes kept blinking and their little round ears kept twitching. Laughing heartily—at which the monkeys only looked all the graver—my wife sat down.

"Will they eat anything?" asked she.

"Try them," I said.

So she picked up a biscuit and threw it among the company. And the result! Three hundred monkeys jumped up in the air like one, and just for one instant there was a riot that defies description. The next instant every monkey was sitting in his place as solemn and serious as if it had never moved. Only their eyes winked and their ears twitched.

My wife threw them another biscuit, and again the riot, and then another and another and another. But at length we had given away all we had to give, and got up to go. The monkeys at once rose, every monkey on the veranda, and advancing gravely to the steps walked down them in a solemn procession, old and young together, and dispersed for the day's occupations.—Youth's Companion.

The Cause of Earthquakes.

The following inquiry was submitted from Pennsylvania to the Lime-Kiln Club:

"Will Brother Gardner give us his opinion as to the cause of earthquakes? Also, a remedy, if he happens to have one?"

"Docrin' de seben y'ars in which I made a speshul study ob de airthquake queshun," replied the President, "I formed and abandoned many different theories. De only one which I cling to am dat sartin great hollers down in de bowels of de airth collect gases by degrees ontil de space am full. Feast of the Dead.

The Chinese inhabitants of New York city on Sunday celebrated their Teaingming or "Feast of the Dead." This commemoration is held annually, and consists of placing upon the graves of departed relatives or friends food and drink and a fac-simile paper figure of the dead person, with appropriate ceremonies. A letter is pinned to the paper man stating that time has not dimmed the remembrance of the many excellencies of his character or the esteem and affection with which he was regarded when alive. A match is then applied to the paper and both figure and communication is then allowed to consume slowly. By this means the message to the dead one is believed to be conveyed to him. Woodlawn and Evergreen Cemeteries, which contain the greater number of Chinamen who have been interred, were most largely visited by Mongolian visitors, but none of the cities of the dead where natives of the Flowery Kingdom are buried was neglected. Sunday night the Chinese Decoration Day was terminated by a general taunting in the house of those who had participated in the observance of the day, and commissaries and attendants of the dead receive or funeral were [illegible]

Dr. S. B. Britian says: "As a rule physicians do not by their professional methods build up the female constitution, and they a idom cure the diseases to which it is always liable in our variable climate and under our imperfect civilization. Special remedies are often required to restore organic harmony and to strengthen the enfeebled powers of womanhood, and for most of these we are indebted to persons outside of the medical profession. Among the very best of these remedies I assign a prominent place to Mrs. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

MASON & HAMLIN commenced as melodeon makers in 1854. They soon introduced the improved instrument now known as the organ, or American organ, as it is termed in Europe. The new instrument proved so superior that it soon took the place of everything else in this country, being adapted and manufactured by all who had previously made melodeons, and many others who were induced to commence the business by the rapidly growing demand. Now about 80,000 American organs are made and sold yearly. Those by the Mason & Hamlin Company have always stood at the head, being acknowledged the best. The same makers are now producing improved Upright Pianofortes, which they believe, are destined to rank as high as their organs have done.—Boston Traveller.

Tom's Wife.

BY E. TEMPLE MOORE.

"A city girl! No wife for a struggling young man," sighed rich, eccentric Aunt Sarah, sorrowfully.

"Brought up with the expectation of becoming an heiress, too. Her extravagant habits will ruin the boy!" said Mrs. Pry, severely.

"And a beauty!" sneered Mrs. Crankett, with withering contempt.

So the gossips down in Tom Lysander's native village put their heads together and nodded grimly and forebodingly when they heard he had married Lila Ware.

The daughter of his employer, he had loved her long and almost hopelessly. One day through the city spread the news like wildfire that Ware & Co. had failed. He went straightway to the house where he had ever been a welcome guest. He found the laughing girl whom he had known graver, and perhaps a little haughtier than of old; a woman whom the first breath of misfortune had not blasted to despondency or languor, but rather had strengthened and invigorated.

She listened silently while he told the story which had lain so long in his heart unsaid. And when he had spoken she told him frankly the love which till then womanly pride had veiled.

He brought her to a home which, though humble and cozy, held none of the luxury of that which she had left; but she made it home in fact as well as word—the dearest spot in the world to Tom Lysander.

Next evening Lila Lysander came up to her husband and wearily thinking.

Through the open windows came the [illegible] with promises of the summer. Below boys were crying blue violets in the city streets.

"Dear, what is it?"

He started at the sound of the tender voice and put his arm around her as she stood beside him.

"Is you bear bad news, pet?"

"I can share it, Tom."

He laughed at the brave, womanly [illegible].

"The gun of bad luck was double-shotted to-day, dear. Our salaries are reduced one-third on account of a partial failure of the firm, and—I had a letter from Aunt Sarah!"

"Oh! Can! what does she say?"

"That she is making arrangements with her lawyer to discontinue the allowance I have had ever since I was a child, also, to eradicate my name from her will. There!"

"And all this on my account?" wistfully.

"Ah, that's where the joy comes in, my darling! I have you—the rest is nothing!"

"Is she not cruel, Tom?"

"Far from it. She is peculiar, whimsical, easily prejudiced. She used to love me dearly. And if her blessed old eyes caught but one glimpse of my bonnie bride—come for a walk, dear."

* * * * * * *

"Work! for you, Mrs. Lysander? You surely don't mean it! Why, my dear child, you don't know the meaning of the word."

Lila Lysander, standing before her father's old lawyer, a slim, childish figure, looked up at him with resolute eyes.

"But I do mean it, Mr. Mitchell. Some position which will permit me to be at home in the evening before Tom returns. He is working nights now to make up for the decrease in his salary. It is terrible to think he should toil so hard while I am comparatively idle. You will help me, Mr. Mitchell, you must!"

"Come to think of it, I know a place that would suit you. She's a client of my office mate, Hilhouse, boarding at the Revere. Rich, bless you, rich! She wants a young girl to stay with her part of the day, while she's in the city—companion, guide, that sort of thing, you know. No one would ever take you to be married, Miss Lila. There! I'm dropping into the name myself. Craig—your second name—Lillian Craig. Capital! A harmless deception. Sit right down here while I go and see Hilhouse. Dear! dear!"

He bustled eagerly off, and bustled smilingly back.

"Hilhouse says it's all right. He is privileged to engage you. A companion—a few hours a day—ten dollars a week to the right person. That wasn't much to you once, Miss Lila. Not much, was it?"

* * * * * * *

There were two ten dollar bills on the top pantry shelf. But Tom didn't know.

"I'll wait till it grows a little," Mrs. Lila said gleefully to herself, "and then I'll give him a surprise party."

One day, in her luxurious room at the Revere, Mrs. Percival lay ill with a feverish headache. Her companion went softly about the room, dropping the curtains and stopping the clocks, lest the ticking of these latter should disturb the invalid. When she came back to the couch she found two dim old eyes fastened on her in kindly scrutiny.

"Miss Craig, how long have you been with me?"

"Two weeks."

"Do you know I've grown very fond of you in those two weeks, little girl?"

A thin hand was laid caressingly on Lila's.

"What a heavy gold ring you wear—like a wedding ring! I wish it was. I wish——"

She grew dreamily silent

The afternoon slipped away. The shadows gathered. The room was darkened, the clock stopped, and Lila did not perceive how late it was growing.

"Does your head ache now?"

"No, but my heart does, Lillian."

She sat suddenly erect and cast the rich wraps aside from her stately old figure.

"I am rich and you are poor. We are both lonely. You have crept into my heart—sadly against my will, I confess, for I had grown very bitter and cynical of late. If you come to me, you shall be as my daughter——"

"Oh, no, no! Forgive me! I cannot! What—what sound is that? A bell! Hark!"

"That?" surprisedly. "That is only the angelus from the French Catholic church!"

"The angelus!" She sprang to her feet in alarm. "Then it is six o'clock. I have outstayed my time. I must go."

She lit the gas and hurriedly found her wraps.

"Why, my Cinderella, what a panic! Leave me your glass slipper. Come in."

The door was flung wide open and a man rushed into the room.

"My darling, how you have frightened me!" he said, crossing to where Lila stood. "I got home early to-night, and forced Ellen to tell me where you—— Aunt Sarah!"

He wheeled around and clasped the old lady in his arms in an impetuous, boyish fashion.

"Well, this is a surprise! How did you and Lila——"

"You know Miss Craig?"

"Miss Craig!"—mystifiedly.

Lila came forward quickly.

"I did not know that she was your aunt, Tom. I have never heard you speak of Mrs. Percival by any other name save Aunt Sarah."

"Miss Craig, you cannot be ——."

"I am Tom's wife!" simply.

"You Tom's wife?"

"I am," with quiet pride.

"But he married a horrid city girl, who was extravagant and knew nothing about work—and——."

Lila laughed at the vague hearsays.

"I am that horrid city girl. I was extravagant when the extravagance meant liberality. And love has taught me the sweetness of work."

A sudden recollection of his aunt's injustice to his wife came to Tom Lysander.

"Come, dear, we must be going. Aunt, pardon this intrusion. Good night!"

But Mrs. Percival sprang up!

"No!" she cried, impulsively; "you will shake hands and forgive an old woman, my children! Bless my soul, Tom's wife?"

And she bent and kissed her.

"Jerry" M'Auley Dead.

A NOTED MISSIONARY OF THE CITY'S SLUMS.

Jeremiah McAuley, the missionary, died at the Cremorne Mission, in New York. He has been ill with consumption for the last six years, and severe hemorrhage from the lungs set in. Dr. Hallock, his family physician, was sent for, and did all that he could to afford relief, but without avail. Mr. McAuley died peacefully in the presence of his wife, Maria, and a few friends. His last words were: "It's all right up there," pointing upward. His wife said to him just as he died: "Is Jesus with you, Jerry?" He nodded his head affirmatively and breathed his last. He opened Cremorne Mission on January 10, 1882, and has done heroic work in reclaiming depraved women. His whole aim in life for the last few years has been to improve their condition. He started a newspaper called "Jerry McAuley's Paper," which has a large circulation all over the world, and the proceeds of its sale he intended to use in establishing a "Home for Fallen Women." He was a persuasive speaker and few could resist his touching appeals to lead a better life.

"Jerry" McAuley came to this city from Ireland when he was thirteen years old. His father had been a counterfeiter, and the son promised for many years to follow in his footsteps. He became a river thief, prize fighter and everything but a murderer. He was finally arrested for highway robbery and sent to Sing Sing for fifteen years. In prison he became converted through the efforts of "Awful" Gardner, a reformed convict. "Jerry" was pardoned after serving one-half of his term, and on his return to N. Y. city he opened, in November, 1872, at No. 316 Water st., a place which he called "The Helping Hand for Men." The neighborhood was one of the lowliest, squalidest, and roughest in New York. But for many years "Jerry" preached the Gospel every night in his humble institution. The good he did was incalculable. Gradually as the morals of the neighborhood improved, "Jerry" looked around him for other places of sin and degradation where he could do good.—Tribune.

The Reason Why.

A good many years ago, when a certain place in Texas was a very small town, quite a number of prominent citizens went out on a hunting expedition. One night, when they were all gathered around the camp fire, one of the party suggested that each man should give the time and reason for his leaving his native State and coming to Texas, whereupon each one in turn told his experience. Judge Blank had killed a man in self-defense in Arkansas, General Scandso had forged another man's signature to a check, while another came to Texas on account of his having two wives. The only man who did not make any disclosure was a sanctimonious-looking old man who, although a professional gambler, was usually called "Parson."

"Well, Parson, why did you leave Kentucky?"

"I don't care to say anything about it. Besides, it was only a trifle. None of you would believe me anyhow."

"Out with it! Did you shoot somebody?"

"No, gentlemen, I did not. Since you want to know so bad I'll tell you. I left Kentucky because I did not build a church."

Deep silence fell on the group. No such excuse for coming to Texas ever had been heard of before. There was evidently an unexplained mystery at the bottom of it. The "Parson" was called on to furnish more light.

"Well, gentlemen, you see, a congregation raised three thousand dollars and turned it over to me to build a church—and I didn't build the church. That's all."

The Sale of Oleomargarine.

B. F. Van Valkenbergh, Deputy State Dairy Commissioner, says:—We are making it warm for these oleomargarine fellows and we intend keeping it up until the law prohibiting the manufacture and sale of artificial butter is strictly enforced. The Lindsley case that we are fighting now is likely to assume a new phase. Lindsley acknowledges that he sold oleomargarine, but denies that he sold it as butter. It is said that the manufacturers of oleomargarine have made a pool to defend any one who is prosecuted for selling "oleo" as "oleo," but they won't assist any one who sells it as butter. This is the reason probably that Lindsley is so anxious to prove that he did not misrepresent his wares. They can't sell the stuff on its merits at retail. It has been tried. Stores have been established for its sale. They did a good business for awhile, but as soon as people had satisfied their curiosity by buying a pound or two the sales fell off, and the stores were closed up. Despite the law a large quantity of the imitation is sold as real butter, and there is no use denying that it is a fine counterfeit.

THE RED WOOD MASSACRE

TERRIBLE SCENES OF FRONTIER BARBARITIES RECALLED.

John Banvard's Description of a Celebrated Indian Tragedy.

I am now in the famous Red Wood region, where the terrible Indian massacre took place a few years since, and am quartered with a family by the name of Webster, who passed through the terrible scenes of those trying times when the bloody Sioux made their foray and murdered hundreds of innocent women and children after they had shot their husbands and fathers defending them. The Sioux barbarities were of such horrid character that the finer feelings of the female Christian heart here is completely blurred and unforgiving toward Indians when these hideous atrocities come up in conversation. And many say that the "only good Indian is a dead one." I now believe, in common with all the people of the frontier, that the government policy with them is all wrong.

Without exception the men and women here who saw and experienced their devilish works in that fiendish massacre say that every one of the captured should have been hung, and, what has been told me of them, I say hanging simply was too good a death for them. I have read of and seen some of their terrible atrocities, but the one told me which I now relate is beyond anything I ever read of or heard of. On the frontier, in the neighborhood of Yellow Medicine, there was the happy home of a settler by the name of Schwandt, consisting of his wife, several children, and a young girl of seventeen years, a relation on a visit to them. One of the girls was recently married and on the point of becoming a mother. This family had been ever kind to the Indians when they visited the neighborhood, always gave them food and frequently lodged them in stormy weather.

This house was one of the first attacked by the fiends, who shot and tomahawked all except the young girl whose life was preserved for the baser passions of these devils incarnate. One of the boys, who was wounded by the first fire of the Indians, succeeded in crawling to a hiding place in sight of the house. He saw his mother, brothers and sisters barbarously slaughtered. His married sister, almost in the pangs of maternity, he saw dragged out of the cabin to a tree and tortured by the Indians. They made wooden pins with their scalping knives, ripped open the body of the unfortunate woman and took out the living infant and crucified it alive against the tree in sight of its still breathing mother (driving the pins through its hands and feet), and there left her to die gazing on the agonizing writhings of her infant, and there the bodies were found by the "burial party" sent out by Colonel Sibley, the dead mother with her lifeless eyes gazing at her crucified child.

No wonder then that the people here hate Indians, especially as the Government only hung thirty-eight of the murderers, when after the outbreak was subdued 400 of the fiends were identified by escaped settlers. This 400 were tried by the local tribunals and military commission and all sentenced to death. But the peaceful Quakers of Philadelphia interfered and petitioned the President, who ordered only one in ten to be hung, when the whole tribe, in fact, should have been executed, and of these only thirty-eight found their way to the scaffold, one escaping and another dying.

The other day I witnessed a "corn dance" of a band of these Sioux, and an old Indian fighter pointed me out several of the rascals who should have then been hung, but are now receiving annuities from our merciful Government. Mrs. Webster, the lady with whom I am now stopping, says she identified an old Indian—whom she well knew, having often fed and lodged him—by the name of Shaa-dee, who had killed a number of white women, or as he said in the Sioux language, "me nepo"—white squaw. He was one of those sentenced to be executed.

I have seen many of the various tribes of British-American Indians, but a more villainous-looking set I never saw than the "Warpenton Sioux." Looking into some of their "teepees" recently on the Dakota prairies, I studied their physiognomies. Murder was in their faces, and they need only an opportunity, when they would again gladly redden their scalping knives with the blood of innocent women and children.

J. BANVARD.

ITALIAN BRIGANDS.—Brigandage in and around Rome has of late assumed such proportions that all tramps who fail to give a satisfactory account of themselves are now arrested and lodged in Rome pending inquiry. What renders brigand capture the more difficult in many localities is that the business of brigandage is followed by persons who are not always at it, but at times pursue rural occupations, and are apparently the most harmless of beings. The authorities continue to fail in their attempts to capture the brigand chief Tanzi, who operates in the neighborhood of Viterbo. For a long time the farmers and landowners tried to resist his incursions, but now they submit to his terms and pay blackmail to secure a quiet life.

LABOR TROUBLES IN WASHINGTON.

Cheap Italians Substituted for Colored Men—Prospects of a Row.

There is a prospect of serious trouble in Washington, between the resident laborers and a gang of Italian and Hungarian laborers imported from New York by Thomas McCann, who has the contract for $300,000 or $400,000 worth of sewer construction in Washington. The local laborers, principally colored men, have been receiving $1.50 per day, and it is said by them that the imported laborers are only to be paid seventy-five and ninety cents per day. A gang of 200 of the foreigners is encamped in Gale's woods, just outside the city limits and is employed on the boundary sewer.

Mr. Robert C. Hewitt, representing the resident laborers, and Mr. William H. Mohler, a contractor, called on the District Commissioners to see if anything could be done to prevent the importation of foreign low priced laborers. They informed the Commissioners that if foreign laborers were allowed to come and crowd out the Washington laborers the District would be obliged to support the latter this winter as paupers. Mr. Mohler, who was a bidder for the sewer contracts, and whose bid was next to the lowest, said that the District contractors in making their estimates of the cost of the work had based them on the current rate of laborers' wages in the District, and that they thought it unfair that a foreign bidder, who had evidently based his estimate for wages on the rate paid to these imported laborers, should be allowed to compete with them.

The Washington laborers are very indignant over the importation of foreign laborers and are making threats.

Mr. J. A. M. Hickey, who is engaged in business with Mr. McCann, said that instead of Mr. McCann's employing 500 Italians, as has been reported, he is working only about fifty Italians, and that they are hired at wages satisfactory to themselves; also that for every Italian employed, McCann has at least four colored persons working for him at $1.50 per day.

The Dishonest Partner.

One of the most frequent and deplorable agents of sudden ruin is the dishonest partner. No business can be managed without mutual confidence between those who conduct it; and though, when we hear that a commercial man has brought himself within reach of the law, we are inclined to doubt if his partner can have been unaware of his malpractices, yet it must be obvious that the dishonesty of one partner too often arises from the unsuspicious simplicity of the other. There are even instances in which no amount of sagacity will save a man from the enterprises of a roguish partner. The following is a very common case: A and B being partners, A dies, and his son succeeds to his share of the business. So long as A was alive the speculative tendencies of B were kept in check; but young A has not the same experience as his father; he has learned to respect B; he looks to him for guidance; and if B has made up his mind to extend the business of the firm by new methods, now that he is head partner, the junior partner will generally be a mere tool in his hands. If young A be more fond of pleasure than business he will of course be even less than a tool—a mere cipher, and B will be left to manage matters as he pleases, until he succeeds in his schemes, and proposes to buy A out of the business; or fails and brings A to poverty and disgrace. It is a cruel thing that if B has absconded, A will have to bear the entire brunt of creditors' wrath, and perhaps be criminally punished for his innocence. But partners have learned this lesson so often that it is almost a wonder how any sane man can assume responsibilities without ascertaining the nature and extent of them. It is certainly not for the public interest that the sudden ruin of an honest partner should be pleaded in extenuation for his ignorance.—Chambers's Journal.

Smut in Wheat.

A dispatch from Chicago says: The wheat men at La Crosse, Wis., and vicinity reluctantly admit that the damage to wheat by rust is not half understood, and say that it was not only serious, but widespread. A McGregor firm had one car of wheat sold at 50 cents at Chicago, which means not more than 28 cents at the buying point if as far west as Dakota. An instance is mentioned of a load of wheat selling at a station on the Green Bay Road for 30 cents, and 50 cents will be a high price in some localities, though in others nothing is heard about smut. Men working at elevators say some cars come in that smell so badly a person cannot work in them. One of the Minnesota millers got caught with smutty wheat, but gave it careful cleaning, and supposed it to be in good grinding condition. His flour was rejected in New York, and brought less than half price. All this trouble is in soft wheat, and it is a very grave trouble indeed.

SILVER.—In regard to the discovery of silver ore in New York and other Atlantic States, Prof. Newberry asserts that silver is not uncommon along the Appalachian range, but seldom occurs in paying proportions. Most tombs of the mines in these districts fail.

DUTIES OF THE REPORTER.

How He Works on a Great City's Paper, and What He Gets For His Work.

"I work on space," said the reporter, "If you go on talking interesting stuff, and I can remember a column of it, and the man at the desk thinks it good matter, and the editor does not run his blue pencil through it after it is in type, I shall get $8 for it. If it makes half a column I'll get $4. I may write a column or more, and the man who edits it may cut it down to half a column. On some papers the rule is to tell a reporter how much to write, and then pay him for that amount whether it is printed or not. It used to be said that practically the same custom obtained on one of the big English dailies in New York, whereon, if a reporter was assigned to write half a column about something that was to take place and then that thing did not take place, he wrote the half column about how and why it did not take place. If I am sent to anything and it does not take place I get paid at the rate of fifty cents an hour for the time wasted on that errand. That we call time work. In time and space I earn about $45 a week, which is a good income for a reporter. You hear about bigger sums, and it is true that once in a while a reporter makes $80 or $100 in a week, but $45 is about the average, and is earned by less than two dozen reporters in the whole United States. Some papers pay $5 a column, some $6; some do not pay for fruitless errands. Reporters in the big cities, as a rule, earn between $10 and $40 a week. In the second-class cities they get as little as $6 a week when they are learning the business, and in Boston, where the same establishments publish both morning and afternoon newspapers, they have to work tremendously hard, however much or little they get. If a reporter finishes his task before one o'clock in the morning he has to be on deck again by half past eight o'clock; if he finishes after one o'clock, he must begin again at noon. The Boston reporters are mainly college graduates, who must be very much astonished at the transformation in their habits."

"You speak about their being assigned to do this and that. Don't they go out and hunt for news?"

"Only the department men do that. The City Hall man hunts for news in the public buildings, the Wall street man hunts for Wall street news; the Police Headquarters man has the most hunting of all when any real news comes up. These men have to hunt for it for two reasons: First, people not trained to the business do not bring to the reporters because they don't know it when they have got it; secondly, because officious persons are apt to try to hide the news, although that it is an almost impossible feat. A good reporter can smell news. He can feel it in the air as you feel a draught in a room. But these hunters are in the small minority. The great majority come to the newspaper offices, and are sent out here and there by the city editor, who has got a diary of the present and future events. Whenever he reads or hears of something that is to take place he puts it in this book. If the city editor sends a reporter to a ball, and the reporter passes a house on fire, he goes right ahead to the ball. Ten to one the city editor knows of the fire. He certainly will know of it almost immediately."—Browne's Monthly.

At the North Pole

Speaking about winter resorts, a military friend of mine writes me that he wouldn't ask anything better than a commission to make a trip in search of the open Polar Sea. He invites me to go. I thanked him for the invitation and asked him when he wanted his men picked, before or after the trip. While I would like well-enough to catch a few pickerel in the open Polar Sea, and breathe the crisp pure, air of no degrees and no minutes longitude due West of a given point, I am almost positive that I will dig the clinkers out of a large base burner this winter and write foamy, frothy, sunny, soothful poems for a dying world.

While no one would more cheerfully go into the giddy whirl of Esquimaux society, or load his stomach with cod-liver oil and old harness and saddles with vinegar, in order that he might gratify a morbid curiosity as to whether the North Pole had a hot box or not, yet I shall not avail myself of the opportunity to go this winter.

While few could more joyously contemplate a life where it would take a ninety-day note a lifetime to mature, I am free to say that I would rather, at present, climb a tall tree until the payee gets by.—BILL NYE.

A Queer Word.

A little story was related by Mr. Longfellow. A Parisian once remarked to him that there was one American word that he never could understand, or find in any dictionary. "What is it?" inquired the poet. "Thatcldo," was the reply. "I never heard of the word," said Longfellow. Presently a servant came in to replenish the fire. After putting on a little fuel Longfellow remarked to him, "That will do." "Ha!" exclaimed the Frenchman, "there is the very word which has troubled me."

THE HUMOROUS PAPERS.

WHAT WE FIND IN THEM TO MAKE US SMILE.

A Great Oversight—What a Mirror Tells—Laying it to the Baby—A Dry Season—A City Appetite—Another Moral, Etc., Etc.

THE CAUSE OF IT.

Doctor: "Tell me exactly what your condition is. Do you have any night sweats?"

Patient: "Yes, almost every night."

"Doctor: "My dear sir! this begins to look serious. About how long do they last?"

Patient: "About as long as I have to tote the baby up and down."—Burlington Free Press.

ANOTHER MORAL.

Mr. Blank—"What! more money to buy ribbon? I never saw such extravagance. What did you do with the change I gave you last week?"

Mrs. Blank—"Put it in my pocketbook."

"And where is the pocketbook?"

"Lost it."

"Lost it; worse and worse. When did did you lose it?"

"The day I went shopping. I laid it down in the first store I visited, before I had taken a cent from it, and it immediately disappeared."

"Was there ever such carelessness? How did it get out of your possession so quickly?"

'It blew away."—Phila. Call.

WHAT A MIRROR TELLS.

Husband—"A mirror is a curious thing, my dear. While it cannot talk it tells a great deal."

Wife (looking at her reflected image with great complacency)—"Yes? and what does it tell?"

Husband—"It tells a great deal that isn't so."

SHE KNEW ABOUT IT.

"I tell you what," airily exclaimed Perkins, as he sat down to the supper table, "I was in a tight place this afternoon." "Yes, I know you were," interrupted his wife, in clear cold utterances that cut like a knife; "I saw you coming out of it." And then it flashed across Perkins's mind that he had accidentally stepped into a saloon with a friend for the purpose of examining a doubtful political statement with the aid of a magnifying glass, and his contemplated anecdote slipped from his grasp like money at a summer resort, while the supper was finished amid a silence so profound that he could plainly hear a napkin ring.—Rockland Courier.

PROBABLY CORRECT.

There was a goodly number of ladies at Twenty-third street and Sixth avenue waiting for an elevated railway train when a specimen of the New York young "gent" of the day came pushing through the crowd, rudely jostling an elderly lady.

"Here, sir, keep off," said an old gentleman at her side, shoving him back "or I'll teach you a little politeness."

"You will, eh?" came from Young America, throwing a withering glance at the elderly party. "I'd have you understand, sir, that there's not a man in this town can teach me politeness."

Then he wondered why the girls all tittered.—Herald.

STARTED WITH A LUCKY NUMBER.

"I hear Gail Fisher, who left here a few months ago, is married and living in Indianapolis. Did he marry well?"

"Oh, yes; he married well. He was well when he married."

"No joking. I mean did he get a good start by marrying?"

"Oh, yes; he got a good start—he married a widow with seven children."

A GREAT OVERSIGHT.

Prominent Citizen—"There is one question I would like to ask you, Mrs. Lockwood, before pledging you my vote. It involves a matter of some delicacy."

Mrs. Lockwood—"Speak freely, sir In matters of grave national importance all minor considerations should be put aside."

Prominent Citizen—"Are you sure that you are old enough to be legally qualified for the office of President of the United States?"

Mrs. Lockwood—"My goodness me! I never thought of that. Certainly I am not."

THE EFFECT OF WHISKY.

"What's that you've got growing on your face?" inquired Yeast of Crimsonbeak the other morning.

"Oh, it's a swelling of some sort," replied the afflicted man.

"Why don't you put some whisky on it?"

"What for?"

"Why to break it."

"Will that break it?"

"Well, I should think so. I've known whisky to 'break' many a 'swell'!"—Yonkers Statesman.

NOT A REliABLE POLICY.

"Don't you think," she inquired of the clerk, "that these shoes are rather large?"

"Oh, no, miss," he returned, "not for you."

After she bounced out of the store and the proprietor had finished talking to him, it would have been impossible to convince him that honesty is the best policy.—Graphic.

CHILTON VIEW.

Published Every Thursday Morning.

CLANTON, ALA., NOV. 13, 1884.

If Rev. Dr. Burchard, who got off the "Rum, Romanism and Rebellion" epigram, has proper self respect he will go hang himself.

The State legislature met Tuesday. It will have the allotted fifty days well filled up with work—and let us hope the work will be well done.

Mrs. John Drew is 60 years of age, Maggie Mitchell is 57 and is worth $500,000; Bijou Heron is 21, Letta is 36 and worth $200,000 Rose Eytinge is 48.

The State Legislature organized with the election of Hon. Thos. Seay, of Hale, as President of the Senate; and Hon. H. C. Armstrong, of Macon, as Speaker of the House.

Dr. G. Johnson lately told the British Medical Association of a patient of his, 55 years old, who had lived upon milk diet for five years. He took a gallon of milk a day, but not a particle of any other food. This treatment cured him of Bright's disease.

Englishmen eat at much shorter intervals than Americans are accustomed to. The farm laborer eats four meals a day, and in some of the baronial halls in England the tables are spread for meals at intervals of four hours during the day and evening.

A premium of thirty thousand dollars, says the Paper World, has been offered by the Mexican Government to any one who will establish in that country a paper mill at a cost of $150,000. The government will also concede the right to all cactus plants on the State lands.

One Teel, a citizen of Hamilton, Ga., has written to the Governor of Georgia, asking him to please send him a divorce at once. Teel says he and his wife have parted and will never live together again. He has applied to the local courts, but can get no relief. The lawyers want him to pay them $25 to write him a divorce, but he is unable to do that. He asks the governor to send him two divorces, one for himself and one for his wife. If the Governor can't do anything he wants his case laid before President Arthur. He says Arthur signs his name "Chester Arthur," and he understood his postoffice is New York. Teel closes his letter as follows: "Please see about this rite off, and dont wate until after I am dead befoor you let me hear from you."

GROVER CLEVELAND.

Our Next President.

Time is rapidly dissipating all doubt as to the election of Cleveland and Hendricks although the vote in New York State is exceedingly close. Out of a vote of 1,200,000 Cleveland has a plurality of about 1,194 according to the most reliable estimates and counts. Below will be found a list of the States voting for Cleveland and Hendricks and the number of electoral votes which each State will cast in the electoral college. It is seen that the Democratic ticket has 219 votes, or 18 more than necessary to elect—the total electoral vote being 400, making 201 necessary to a choice. New York, Connecticutt, New Jersey, Indiana, Virginia and West Virginia are all in the Democratic column. The solid south gives its 153 votes to the Democratic ticket. The Republicans claim that there has been fraudulent returns in New York State and will not concede the State to the Democrats until the official announcement of the result by the State Board of Canvassers, which Board it may be well enough to say here, is Democratic. Following will be read with interest:

Mr. Danniel Manning, Chairman of the Democratic State Committee, sends this dispatch to New York Evening Post:

ALBANY Nov. 6.

By the official returns reported from every county, Cleveland and Hendricks have carried New York State by a safe and sure majority. No machinations, or false claims, or pretended doubt of Mr. Blaine's managers can change this result. Friends of honest government and honest elections can be everywhere assured that the Democratic State Board of Canvassers will see that the true vote is correctly declared.

DANIEL MANNING.

In an interview with a Troy Telegram reporter to-night Danniel Manning said: "I think Cleveland has carried New York by 1,500 plurality."

The Albany Argus says:

The declaration of the Canvassing Board of a State makes the returns of that State valid, also the only certificate of its electoral vote which is receivable. The canvassing Boards of Democratic States will let no fraudulent and false vote be lyingly declared the vote of that State. The true vote will be declared certified, and sent forward. The Democratic House of Representatives will let none other than the true vote be counted to Blaine. Meditators of fraud, it is just as well that these facts be told betimes now. No Fraudulent Commission will be allowed to put James G. Blaine in the White House or keep Grover Cleveland out of it. The men who attempt it will be killed, and the legal consequences of killing them will be taken care of afterward.

Governor Cleveland said: "I believe I have been elected President, and nothing but the grossest fraud can keep me out of it, and that we will not permit."

GOULD ADMITS CLEVELAND'S ELECTION AND PATS HIM ON THE BACK.

Jay Gould sent this dispatch to Governor Cleveland: "I heartily congratulate you on your election. All concede that your administration as Governor has been wise and conservative, and, in the larger field as President, I feel that you will do still better, and that the vast business interests of the country will be entirely safe in your hands. JAY GOULD.

VANDERBILT'S CONGRATULATIONS.

An Albany dispatch says the following letter was received by Governor Cleveland from Wm. H. Vanderbilt:

Hon. Grover Cleveland—My dear sir:—I congratulate you and the people of the whole country upon your election to the Presidency of the United States. You owe your election, in my opinion, to the fact that the people believed you to be an honest man, and not to any particular efforts made by any faction of either Democratic or Republican parties. Independent men who care more for good government than for parties or individuals have made you their choice because they were convinced that your administration would not be for the benefit of any political organization or favored persons, but for the interest of the whole people. This is just the result which is most desired. We have reached a time when party amounts to little. Country is above all, and wants an honest government by honest men. Belief that we will find it in you has led to your election.

Yours very truly,
W. H. VANDERBILT.

ATTORNEY GENERAL O'BRIEN'S VIEWS.

WATERTOWN, N. Y., Nov. 10.—Attorney-General O'Brien, one of the State canvassing board, in a speech to Democrats here said: "I have no fears that the wishes or judgment of the people as expressed at the ballot box will be falsified or defeated. No party or set of men can steal the electoral vote of the Empire State The laws of the State in regard to elections and counting votes are too perfect to admit of fraud, and the people of New York are too much in earnest to tolerate fraud, even if it were possible. Votes given by the people of this State, I have no doubt will be honestly counted and the result truthfully declared."

The latest count of the vote of New York gives Cleveland a plurality of more than 1,200.

How The New York Vote Will Be Compiled

The Albany Journal says: That on Tuesday the Board of Supervisors meet in various counties and canvass the returns. Their duties are purely clerical. They simply add up the total returns of towns, election districts and wards, certify to their accuracy and transmit certified returns to the Secretary of State. During this month the State Board of Canvassers, consisting of Secretary Carr, Comptroller Chapin, Attorney-General O'Brien, State Treasurer Maxwell and State Engineer Sweet, meet in this city and add up the totals of the supervisor's returns from counties, and the result is the official vote of the State, and according to that result certificates of election are issued by the State Board to the Presidential electors who have been chosen. All of this board are Democrats except Secretary of State Carr.

The official count of the vote of New York State may not be complete for several days.

Enthusiasm in New York.

The New York Sun of the 7th says:

A swollen tide of humanity choked Madison square last night. It swept to and fro with a hoarse and continuous roar. Recurring bursts of excitement set thousands of hats swaying over the black and white expanse of hats and faces. A broker of herculean frame, with a big beaver whose lustrous polish reflected the electric glare of the square, stepped out of the crush into Fifth avenue at 7 o'clock, and shouldered a brand-new broom like a musket. The Seventh Regiment band, sent from the Democratic headquarters, formed in ranks behind him, and blew into the trumpets till their eyes bulged and thumped the drums till the air shook with the boom. Then the Wall street Hercules twirled his broom with the dazzling intricacy of a trained drum major and shouted, "Fall in for Cleveland."

Well-dressed men shouldered other brooms and walking sticks quick as lightning, and by the time the band had marched half a block there were more than twenty ranks of twenty files front tramping in the roadway. When the procession had made just one circuit of the square there were more than 2,000 men in line, and new lines formed every minute. Big portraits of Cleveland were spiked on the canes and tied on the brooms. No torchlight procession ever awoke the uproar that greeted the paraders. The square gradually stood up on end until the clerk of the Fifth Avenue said that if the excitement grew any worse the houses would begin to slide off the alarming incline. The big throng cheered in sections of 100 as it tramped, and shouted in time with the tremendous melody of the band these couplets:

Ma, ma, where's my pa?
Gone to the White House, ha! ha! ha!

Blaine, Blaine, James G. Blaine,
The biggest liar in the State of Maine.

Soap, soap, Jay Gould's soap,
Can't buy New York or keep up hope.

Coming East to Help Fix Cleveland's Cabinet.

MADISON, WIS., Nov. 6.—William F. Vilas, member of Democratic National Committee, has started East to help fix Cleveland's Cabinet. It is said that before starting this afternoon he ordered his two large hotels in this city to be decorated, and "bet his life that Cleveland will get there." The Democrats had a torchlight procession at 4 this morning and fired cannon to-day. Vilas has sent no more telegrams to Dan Manning declaring that Wisconsin is Democratic.

A Card of Tanaks.

The church at Mountain Creek will accept my humble thanks for a purse of fifty-one dollars presented at the close of the recent meeting held at that place, fifty of which was contributed by the liberal and enterprising firm of Smith & Marbury. They are very much given to such acts of kindness.

LOCAL DOTTINGS.

The delightful Indian Summer is upon us.

Miss Lucy Meredith has a very good school at Chandler's mill.

Mrs. Mary Marsh is fitting up her storehouse and will soon open a stock of goods.

Mr. W. F. Smith, agent for the sale of the L. & N. railroad lands will be in Clanton on the 20th inst.

Rev. J. L. Thompson delivered an excellent sermon at the Baptist church, on Tuesday last. Mr. Thompson has been called to preach at this church for the next year.

Mr. Francis Boykin, of Bullock county, which county he served as Treasurer for a number of years, is visiting the family of his son, Mr. J. B. Boykin, at this place.

The protracted meeting recently held at Mountain Creek Baptist Church closed Thursday night last. During the meeting there were thirty-six accessions to the church membership.

Clanton Academy cadets turned out in a body on Friday night and fired a battalion salute in honor of the election of Cleveland and Hendricks. The anvil was also brought into play by the clerks and business men to work off their surplus enthusiasm. The rejoicing was general over the entire country.

The VIEW enters upon the fourth year of its existence with this issue. As it enters upon its fourth volume it tenders congratulations to its readers that the same issue of the paper tells of the election of the first Democratic President the country has had in twenty-four years. If our friends will help us by keeping their subscriptions paid up, we will do our part towards giving them a paper which grows better as it grows older.

Smith & Montgomery, at Birmingham, are the leading book sellers and stationers. Their stock of school books and miscellaneous books is large and complete. They carry every thing in the stationery line comprising blank books, inks, &c., and make a specialty of fine photograph and autograph albums. They solicit correspondence. Jemison Jottings.

Beautiful, frosty mornings, and lovely, sunshiny days.

Mr. W. D. Hubbard, of Helena, a most estimable young man and a former student, is the popular assistant in Jemison Academy.

School, Sunday school, and church are all proud of Willie.

Mr. D. M. Hand, who has been on a visit to relatives and friends in Texas for several months, has returned home. Every body, and especially the Sunday school choir, welcome "Uncle Dave" back to our midst.

Dr. J. J. Dawson has sold out in Jemison and removed to a farm which he has purchased near Colera. Mr. J. R. [illegible], of Providence neighborhood, the purchaser of Dr. D.'s place, has moved in. We regret to lose the doctor; but are proud of the acquisition of such a citizen as Mr. Sims. We welcome him to our village.

Died, on the 1st inst., of congestion, Mrs. Beulah Dawson, wife of G. W. Dawson. She leaves an infant daughter, only a few months old, a stricken husband, and numerous relatives and friends, to mourn her untimely death. We tender our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved.

We are glad to note several substantial and valuable improvements. Improvement on the union church is nearing completion, and when finished, we believe it will compare favorably with any house of worship in the county. Mr. J. A. Skaggs, Jemison's "handsomest man," has done the work—by the way, Jemison is as proud of Bro. Skaggs, as a mechanic, as she is of his good looks. Work is also progressing rapidly on the new Cumberland Presbyterian church. Mr. Thompson, of Randolph, is the contractor. We predict it will be a thing of beauty, when finished. Mr. M. C. Palmer is having a residence built here. He comes among us for the benefit of school. We welcome him. Other improvements are talked of.

Only one darky voted at this box in the election last Tuesday, and that one was J. M. Reed. He marched bravely up to the polls and cast his ballot "for Cleveland, like the other white folks." "Mon." lives at home, reads the county paper, and is an honor to his race.

UNUS.

Verbena Views.

The citizens of this place have been very lively the past week over the election of Cleveland and Hendricks. The boys shot anvils until late in the night last Friday and Saturday nights. They made the welkin ring with cow bells, tin pans, &c. They are planning another "Grand Rally" to wind up with.

Mr. K. Wells, representative from this county, has gone to Montgomery, to enter upon the discharge of his duties.

Mr. Handy Jones, of Coosa county, has moved his family to this place. They are a splendid family and are welcome to Verbena.

Mrs. J. L. Hatch [illegible] Clifton House [illegible] friends and acquaintances [illegible] are glad to have her again among them.

Mr. G. A. Logan has moved his family to the Harrison house. Mr. Logan has been living near here for several years and his family is well known to the citizens of the place. His lovely daughters will also be an acquisition.

Mr. J. W. Moody, one of Montgomery's most successful farmers and merchants, has moved his family to this place, where he has purchased property. His is an excellent family, and we are gratified to have them locate among us.

Mr. W. B. Strock, of this place, made this year on one acre and a quarter four hundred and eighty-five gallons of molasses. In addition to the above, he made over five hundred bushels of corn, ten bales of cotton and plenty of wheat, oats, potatoes, &c. He also has hogs enough to make his meat for another year. Mr. Strock is what we might term a model farmer.

Nervousness.

The moment there is danger of impairment of the mind from excessive nervous exhaustion, or where there exists foreboddings of evil, a desire for solitude, shunning and avoiding company, vertigo and nervous debility, or when insanity has already taken place, PERUNA and MANALIN should be implicitly relied on. But it is never well to wait so long before treatment is commenced. The early symptoms are loss of strength, softness of the muscles, dim or weak sight, peculiar expression of the face and eyes, coated tongue, with impaired digestion; sometimes certain powers only are lost while the [illegible] enjoying comparative health. [illegible] Roderick, Warren, O., writes: "It is with pleasure I [illegible] that I write to you to tell you of the great benefit I have derived from the use of PERUNA. I have used several bottles of your PERUNA, and can safely say it has done me a great deal of good. I have improved ever since I commenced using it."

Mr. T. J. Webber, Plymouth, O., writes: "I am selling your PERUNA, and having a good trade on it. It gives excellent satisfaction."

Mr. Thomas Acton, Brooklyn Village, Cuyahoga, Ohio, says: "I received a severe wound in my foot by treading on a nail. It inflamed and was painful and sore for a long time. I had every reason to fear lockjaw. Your almanac's suggestions as to local applications and the taking of your PERUNA and MANALIN were followed to the letter, and thanks to you, my foot is entirely well, and I am happy."

Interesting to Ladies.

Our lady readers can hardly fail to have their attention called this week to the latest combination of improvements in that most useful of all domestic implements, the "sewing machine."

As we understand it, a machine for family use should meet first of all these requirements: It should be simple in its mechanism; it should run easily; it should do a wide range of work; it should be as nearly noiseless as possible; it should be light, handsome, durable, and as cheap as is consistent with excellence throughout.

These conditions the "Light-Runing New Home" certainly meets. It has also several very important and useful attachments and "notions" of its own, which go far to make good its claims to popular favor.

The "New Home" specially recommends itself to purchasers on account of its superior mechanical construction, ease of management and reasonable price. Over half a million have been sold in the last three years, all of which are giving universal satisfaction. This unrivaled machine is manufactured by the New Home Sewing Machine Co., Orange, Mass., and 30 Union Square, New York.

THE COST OF A CRIMINAL.

A NEW AND PECULIAR VIEW OF THE FIRST OF SOCIETY.

What a Single Thief Costs Upon Society—An Appalling Waste.

[From the New York Mail.]

The actual loss in dollars and cents which a single criminal inflicts upon society is sometimes appalling. We groan at the iniquity of politicians, and rejoice when one of them who has stolen a few thousand dollars is driven to jail or out of the country; but such a fellow is, as a rule, less dangerous than some common criminal who is sentenced for a term of years for a small burglary or for stealing a horse. For the criminal classes waste far more than they consume; it is beyond doubt that a thief—and most criminals live by theft—a thief, who does nothing whatever for society but prey upon it, always takes far more than he would need were his operations honest. Money is worth its face value, no matter in what hands it happens to be; but the pickpocket whose specialty is watches, knows that to earn twenty dollars by his delicate handiwork he must steal at least a hundred dollars' worth of timepieces. The "junk" thief will tear out of a house, in course of erection, all the lead pipe of the plumbing system, which in material and labor has cost several hundred dollars, and sell it by the pound as old lead, being well satisfied if he can get ten dollars for his night's work. The financial results of some great burglaries of dry goods and jewelers' shops, silk houses and private residences have been shown, at the trial of the thieves, to be only one-tenth, one-twentieth, and even smaller fractions of the value of the goods taken. Even in great bond robbery cases the thieves have obtained but a very small proportion of the actual value of the securities stolen. Theft, like many other industries, is not complete in itself; the booty must be sold, frequently it must go through several hands, to each of which sticks part of the price, and no one of them is the hand of a person who is earning an honest living.

This would be bad enough, even were every thief persistent in trying to keep down expenses in his personal and domestic management. Unfortunately, however, among the virtues which some criminals profess and practice, economy will be sought in vain. No reckless heir of a million was ever more free-handed than the thief is while his money lasts. He wears fine clothes of faultless cut, he smokes the best cigars; and in the dingy back-rooms of groggeries, in the streets most frequented by thieves, there is more champagne opened than in some famous places on Broadway. Burglars always drive good horses, and their feminine companions are arrayed like Solomon in all his glory. Such luxuries cost a great deal of money. So the thief who does not want to change his habits is obliged to be industrious in business, and lose no good chance through carelessness. If he spends five thousand dollars per year, he must steal fifty thousand, in which case he costs society as much as a hundred honest day-laborers, and gives society nothing in return but an indefinable sense of apprehension.

"Like breeds like," and criminals' families may always be depended upon to live by crime. Perhaps not all thieves and bad characters in general can repeat the appalling record of the Dukes family, which gave the country several hundred criminals; but they do their utmost, in that direction, multiplying rapidly and neglecting to train their offspring to live properly.

It will thus be seen to reform even a single criminal is to spare society a serious and steady infliction. A common thief, who lives by his craft, steals more in his lifetime than any great rogue, who is not a bank president, ever gets by a single "haul." It is hard for a sentimentalist, or even a missionary, to regard such a fellow with tenderness and brotherly love, but any one can afford to wish the rascal's business methods were different. To persuade and assist discharged criminals to lead honest and self-supporting lives is one of the tasks to which the National Prison Association has addressed itself. The work should commend itself to any man's common sense and pocket.

A French Consul.

A curious story is told by an old schoolfellow of M. Lemaire, late French Consul General at Shanghai and recently appointed Minister Plenipotentiary at Hue. Twenty-five years ago he was at school at Tonnerre. There, with unconsciousness of his destiny, he was nicknamed Jaunot, on account of his singularly yellow complexion. He was a quiet lad, not brilliant, often bullied by his companions and somewhat harshly treated by his professors. When fifteen he passed a vacation with an uncle in Burgundy and had for companion a cousin much younger than himself. Their delight was to play at soldiers. Lemaire shouldered a rusty flint gun and the cousin flourished an old sabre. One day it was agreed that they should get up some wine from the cellar, not with any pilfering intention, but merely to play at soldiers plundering. As the cousin was mounting the cellar stairs Lemaire exclaimed, "Here is the enemy!" and pulled the trigger. The gun, which he did not know to be loaded, went off and blew out the brains of the young cousin. Lemaire's family, horrified at the event, sent him to sea as a cabin boy. Nothing was heard of him for years, and he sent no letters home. At last it was found out that he had established himself at Saigon, had learned Chinese and was employed as interpreter at the French Consulate. Later news came that he had married a Cochin Chinese lady, whether a native or settler is not stated, and now the result of that adventurous shot with the flint gun is that he is recognized as the most accomplished Annamitist that France can find to combine the pliable strong will of native rulers. Such is the history of Jaunot.

DEFENCES OF CANTON.

How the Port is Protected Against an Attack of the People.

A correspondent sends the following: "In view of the present uncertainty as to what will be the next point of attack by the French, such it may not be out of place to consider what constitute the defences of Canton, which as a commercial center is one of the most important points in China. Though a port to which large steamers may have access, it is not situated directly upon the seacoast, but about seventy miles above the choir of islands that cover the mouth of the Pearl River. About midway, where the river narrows to about two miles in width, the defences commence. This point is called, upon the European charts, the Bocca Tigris, and the adjacent forts are known as the Bogue forts. These forts, or, properly speaking, heavy water batteries, are seven in number, two of which occupy small islands in the center of the stream, to the easterly of which runs the main channel; two others are upon the western bank of the river, and the remaining three are located upon the eastern bank. The crest of the hill on Anunghoy Island is occupied by a work which constitutes a land fort, or large fortified camp, which has been added to the defences of the point since the attack of the allied fleet in 1858, when the water batteries were rendered ineffective by the landing of a party below, which, passing to the rear, attacked them from the hillside above. These water batteries constitute a very formidable obstruction to the entrance of the river, as they are casemated and mount heavy guns of European manufacture.

Certain it is that if the Chinese could but serve their guns as they should be served, the passage through the channel would be impracticable until the forts had been silenced. Unfortunately for them, however, they depend upon the caliber of their guns and the weight of the projectile rather than upon skill in handling for successful resistance of invasion. Foo-Chow has perhaps demonstrated to them, though perhaps too late, the advantage of skill over caliber, and it will be well for them if it has induced them to change their tactics.

After passing the Bogue forts no further impediment is reached until arriving at Dane's Island, about eighteen or twenty miles beyond. Here the river separates into two channels, one known as the North Reach, or Whampoa Channel, and the other as the Back Reach, or Blenheim Passage. Naturally the Chinese have endeavored to establish at Dane's Island, which is the key to the approach—a defence of both channels of the most formidable and effective character. On the north side of the island a barrier of stones has been established, leaving a passage of 150 feet in the mid-channel, which can be closed in a few hours by sinking laden junks, which are at hand for that purpose. On Back Reach they have constructed a bridge across the river, with a similar opening of 150 feet, also to be closed upon the approach of a hostile fleet. Upon the hills that crown Dane's Island a series of earthworks have been erected, mounting heavy guns, that command both channels with a plunging fire from an elevation of over seventy feet. These fortifications are supported by auxiliary batteries upon the main banks of the river on both sides, and here also are established fortified camps garrisoned by trained soldiers from the northern provinces.

After passing Dane's Island Barrier and forts on the North Reach a torpedo bed must be traversed, which successfully accomplished, no other obstacle will be encountered until what are known as the Barrier forts are reached, about eight miles further up the river. These comprise four casemated water batteries, which cover a narrow channel through the old stone barrier, where skillful pilots are required for navigating any except the lightest gunboats. When once clear of this obstruction no further impediment exists to an approach to the city, which would soon be under the command of the guns of a hostile fleet. Upon the Back Reach, after passing the bridge and the covering batteries, no obstacle will be encountered until passing Haddington Island, where a narrow channel through the old stone barrier requires a competent pilot and a high tide for large vessels. These old barriers were established to prevent the approach of the allied fleet in 1858. Within five miles of the city there are four old forts which would prove of little effect in averting the advance of a fleet able to pass Dane's Island.

Would Have His Joke.

It is told of the son of an Ohio farmer, who had been reading with a view of becoming a homœopathic physician, that he was seen tying a number of globules, containing about a teaspoonful of something, to the fence stalks on the windward side of the wheat field.

"What are you doing, Tom?" said a neighbor who happened along.

"I am homœopathically fertilizing this field. Those little sacks each contain one drachm of fertilizer, the vital element of which will be broadly disseminated over the field by the summer winds, which is much better than scattering the stinking stuff with a shovel."

"Well, you may be right, but if I don't much mistaken you'll eat homœopathic biscuits this winter," observed the fogy farmer.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

A FREEMONT CROW.—The Schenectady Star says: "Red" Butler is the owner of a crow which seems to be possessed of almost human sense. The bird has a great habit of tearing into strips and destroying every scrap of paper upon which it can put its claws and beak. A day or two since, however, Mr. Butler noticed that the crow had a scrap of paper which it guarded most carefully, and to which it seemed anxious to attract Mr. Butler's attention. The latter picked up the scrap of paper, and upon examining it got, found it was a one-dollar bill!

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

DISCOVERIES among the ruins of the Zuni and Aztec cities are splendid and what is remarkably like those employed by the Highlanders in Scotland. The position of some would indicate an antiquity of at least 2,000 years.

A NEW Little Boston girl, finding that she remarkably resembled the leading actress in a theatrical company, found diversion in ordering a large quantity of finery sent to her double, and signing that person's name to numerous papers.

IT IS said that the estate of the late Bishop Simpson, amounting to nearly a hundred thousand dollars, was nearly all the result of profitable investments which the advice and opportunities given by warm friends enabled him to make.

AN architect says that forty-nine people out of fifty who build homes for themselves voluntarily increase his estimates from $1,000 to $6,000, by changes they want made on the original plans, and in case they get "stuck" they howl at him.

THE Missouri father took a most sensible view of the situation when he did not pursue his eloping daughter, but sent a clergyman on a swift horse to overtake the couple, in order that the marriage ceremony might be performed properly.

A WEDDING in Boston was lately forestalled by the death of the bridegroom. The bridal dress is understood to have been thereby bewitched in some manner, and several successive possessors of it believe that it has brought illness and other evils to them.

W. HALLETT GREENE, a colored youth, and a graduate of the College of the City of New York, has been appointed to the Signal Service corps. Gen. Hazen objected to the appointment but Secretary Lincoln in a special order ordered the enlistment made.

THE oldest and largest tree in the world, as far as known, is a chestnut near the foot of Mount Ætna. It is hollow, and big enough to admit two carriages driving abreast through it. The circumference of the main trunk is 212 feet. The Grizzly Giant, monarch of the Mariposa Grove, measures 92 feet.

THE law about the admission of Chinamen is so rigidly enforced on the Pacific coast that a chinaman residing in San Francisco found, on going across the line into British America, that he could not go back without making the journey to China and return, in order to obtain a certificate that he was a merchant, and not a laborer.

STANDING ROCK, a Custer massacre Indian, died of consumption, last month, while traveling with an Iowa circus. Sitting Bull and his braves are on exhibition in New York city. This forces the belief upon the mind of an exchange that the Custer massacre was after all only a shrewd advertising dodge on the part of the aborigines.

OFFICIAL raiders caught an unlicensed liquor business in full operation in Adams, Mass. The keeper hastily emptied his keg of whisky into a sink, whereupon the enemy plugged the vent, so as to secure some of the fluid as evidence. A hard fight ensued, in which many eyes were blackened and the hole was repeatedly stopped and unstopped; but a sponge was saturated with the escaping beverage, and carried off to be carefully squeezed and tested.

IT was supposed that the difficulties between the New York Tribune and its old printers were settled, but the Central Labor Union received Sunday the report of Typographical Union No. 6 on the failure of its negotiation to end the Tribune strike. The report said that Mr. Reid had conceded everything the printers asked for, and then had made stipulations on his part that totally nullified all of theirs. The committee then refused to treat with Mr. Reid. The boycotting of the Tribune will continue.

O'Connell's Strategy.

Daniel O'Connell knew his countrymen through and through. When he stood before twelve of them, shut up in a jury-box, they usually gave him their heads and hearts to do with as he pleased.

He was a masterly actor. He played with each wild passion of their Irish nature, and it answered as he willed. If he became mad, there was method in his madness. An anecdote illustrates how his feigned anger once saved a man from the gallows.

He had to defend a prisoner charged with a crime whose penalty was death. The case seemed hopeless; but O'Connell determined to save the man, if possible.

While cross-examining the principal witness the cunning lawyer purposely put several incriminating questions to him. The opposite counsel, of course, objected to them, and at last the judge peremptorily ordered him to desist from asking such questions.

This was just what O'Connell had been maneuvering for. With good warmth of manner he exclaimed:

"As you, my Lord, refuse me permission to defend my client, I leave his fate in your hands; his blood be on your head if he is condemned!"

Leaving the court-room, with apparent indignation, he strode up and down outside it until a friend rushed out, shouting, "He's acquitted! he's acquitted!"

The strategy was successful in duping the jury. They innocently believed that their favorite advocate had been unjustly prevented from defending his client, and quickly acquitted him.

HE came in very late, and he kept his wife quite excited a whipped-up story of a narrow escape that he had had on his way home from being run over by a fire engine. "A second later, my dear, he exclaimed, "and I would have been a dead man. It fairly took my breath away." "So it did, dear," the wife replied, taking her hand to the veil.

HOW BILL SYKES DIED.

The Villainous Character in "Oliver Twist" who Murdered Nancy Sykes—How the Wretch Met a Justly Deserved Tragic Death.

Bill Sykes is a villainous character in "Oliver Twist." After the murder of Nancy Sykes, Bill and his dog travel together, and he comes to be unable to place any distance between himself and the scene of the murder. The scene in the public house at Hatfield will be remembered. During his stay a peddler or mountebank enters who tries to sell a composition which, as he says, will remove all stains. He takes Sykes's hat, remarking: "Gentlemen, all observe the dark stain upon this gentleman's hat, no wider than a shilling but thicker than a half crown. Whether it is a wine stain, fruit stain, beer stain, water stain, paint stain, pitch stain, mud stain or blood stain" ——

At this Sykes, with a horrible curse, overthrew the table, tore his hat from the peddler's grasp and rushed from the house. He traveled thence, but everywhere could he see the shadow of his unfortunate victim. As Dickens says: "He could hear its garments rustling in the leaves, and every breath came laden with that last low cry." At last he reaches the neighborhood beyond Dockhead, in the Borough of Southwark, where stands Jacob's Island. On this island is a number of old, roofless, warehouses. To the upper room of one of these he goes, in which are Toby Crackit, Mr. Chitling and another robber. Here he is pursued by an infuriated mob, who clamor for his life. He asks for a rope, by means of which he intends to drop into Folly Ditch which surrounds part of Jacob's Island, and not, as your correspondent says, to the floor below. He sees that escape is almost impossible, but determines to endeavor to creep away, should he succeed in dropping to the ditch, in the darkness and confusion. He ties one end around a stack of chimneys, and makes a noose with the other. After this, says the author, "at the very instant when he brought the loop over his head previous to slipping it beneath his arm-pits—* * * At that very instant the murderer, looking behind him on the roof, threw his arms above his head, and uttered a yell of terror.

"'The eyes again!' he cried in an unearthly screech. Staggering as if struck by lightning he lost his balance and tumbled over the parapet. The noose was on his neck. It ran up with his weight tight as a bow string and swift as the arrow it speeds. He fell for five and thirty feet. There was a sudden jerk, a terrific convulsion of the limbs and there he hung with the opened knife clenched in his stiffening hand?"

CANDIDUS.

No More of It.

"I am 58 years old, and this is the first time I ever made a fool of myself!"

So spoke Farmer John Dayton, as he stood before the bar of justice, and his look and manner went to prove that he meant what he said.

"Seems rather strange that an intelligent man of your age should get in this fix," replied the court.

"It does, and no mistake, and I can't account for it. I had finished my trading and was ready to go home, when a chap wanted to sell me a dog. In the course of half an hour I drank two glasses of beer, and the last I remember I felt awful good and was stepping high and waving my hat."

"Are you used to beer?"

"Well, I drink three or four glasses a month."

"It was the two glasses to-day to-gether. Don't do it again."

"If I do you may have me hung."

"I shall suspend sentence in your case, but you must take this as a warning."

"Won't I? It's a warning that stands out like a circus-bill on a country blacksmith shop, and I shan't forget it! I've lost about $14 in cash, been locked up all night, split a suit of clothes, and made a fool of myself, and you needn't expect to see me here again. Good-by, 'Squar', and if you ever come out our way I'd like to have you stop!"—Detroit Free Press.

An Ice Carnival.

Extensive preparations are under way for holding a brilliant ice carnival this mid-winter at Greenwood Lake, New York. It is on the line of a railroad and but a few miles from New York City. The Greenwood Lake Improvement Company has the matter under control. It is intended to make the carnival complete in every detail, and more attractive than that in Canada last winter. One of the principal attractions will be the large ice palace, which will be erected on the lake and be used for a week. During this time all sorts of other attractions will be offered. Among these will be horse racing on the ice, curling matches, baseball matches on skates, skating matches, toboggan contests, running matches, iceboat races and various other winter sports. The hotels, which are only open in the summer and not arranged for winter, are being got ready for the vast crowd expected.

"She is well. After the doctors gave up her case she tried Dr. Pierce's 'Favorite Prescription' and began to get better right away. 'Why,' said she, 'I feel as if I had been raised from the dead, almost.'" Mrs. Harriet Cunningham, of Cincinnati, Ohio, writes: "Early last winter my daughter was attacked with a severe cold, which settled on her lungs. We tried several medicines, none of which seemed to do her any good, but she continued to get worse, and finally raised large amounts of blood from her lungs. We called in a family physician, but he failed to do her any good. At this time a friend, who had been cured by Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the Lungs, advised me to give it a trial. We then got a bottle, and she began to improve, and by the use of three bottles was entirely cured."

PATIENT WITH THE LIVING

Sweet friend, when thou and I are gone
Beyond earth's weary labor,
When small shall be our need of grace
From comrade or from neighbor,
Passed all the strife, the toil, the care,
And done with all the sighing,
What tender ruth shall we have gained
Alas, by simply dying?

Then lips too chary of their praise
Will tell our merits over,
And eyes too swift our faults to see
Shall no defect discover.
Then hands that would not lift a stone
Where stones were thick to cumber
Our steep-hill path will scatter flowers
Above our pillowed slumber.

Sweet friend, perchance both thou and I,
Ere love is past forgiving,
Should take the earnest lesson home—
Be patient with the living;
To-day's repressed rebuke may save
Our blinding tears to-morrow,
Then patience—e'en when keenest edge
May whet a nameless sorrow.

'Tis easy to be gentle when
Death's silence shames our clamor,
And easy to discern the best
Through memory's mystic glamour;
But wise it were for thee and me,
Ere love is past forgiving,
To take the tender lesson home—
Be patient with the living.

MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

A Homely Boy.

"Mamma," said little Emily Harding to her mother, "I don't want to go to school to-day."

"Why not, my dear?" inquired her mother.

"Oh, I do not know. It is so cold!" said the little girl.

"But, Emily," said Mrs. Harding, "it was not too cold yesterday, and the weather is milder to-day; you must have some other reason for not wishing to go to school; what is it?"

Emily was silent for a few moments, and then, instead of replying, asked her mother if she had seen Frank Leigh go by?

"Yes," answered her mother; "he passed ten minutes ago, running as fast as he could."

"Oh, let me stay at home to-day, dear mother! do!" said little Emily, earnestly.

"You shall stay at home if you so much desire to do so," said her mother; "but you must give me your reason for not wanting to go to school to-day; it is quite a new fancy, for you are generally in such a great hurry to get off."

"Ah! that is when I am early!" cried Emily.

"But it is not late now," said her mother.

"Well, but Frank is gone," answered Emily, hanging down her head and pouting her pretty red lips; "and he will be waiting for me at the corner."

"That would be kind in him, Emily," replied Mrs. Harding; "so why should you not like to go with him?"

"I do not love Frank Leigh!" said the little girl, pettishly; "he is such a homely boy, and he always walks with me, and wants to hold my hand when we are crossing the ice; and his hand is so hard and rough, and he has such great eyes, and such straight hair, and his jacket is so ugly! He is not a bit like Cousin Edmund."

"Very true," said her mother; "but Edmund has a rich father, who buys him handsome clothes, and his mother has time to dress him every morning and brush his curly hair; but, though he looks prettier, I do not think he is a better boy than Frank. Frank's father is poor, and his mother has many little children to dress every day, and cannot spend so much time on him; besides Frank works hard in his father's garden, and that makes his hands rough; but Frank is a favorite of mine; I think him a very good, industrious little boy; and I am sorry my Emily does not love him because he is not pretty; it is better to be good than pretty, Emily."

"Yes, mamma," replied the little girl; "but all the children make game of me because I always go to school with him; they say he is so homely, and call him 'goggle eyes!' I wish he would not walk with me! I don't love him!" and here Emily began to cry.

Her mother tried to comfort her; but Emily was but a small child and could not understand all her mother said about good looks being of less value than good deeds. She was an affectionate little girl, but she had been rather petted and spoiled, which made her vain. She thought herself very pretty, and her pride was offended when the school-children said she was Frank Leigh's little wife, and called her "Mrs. Goggle-eyes." So she made up her mind not to walk with Frank or to play with him any more. Poor Frank! he loved little Emily very much; he had gone to school with her every morning for a whole year. He was eight years old—two years older than Emily—and he always took care of her. If he had an apple or a cake he would save it to share with her; he carried her books, and, while less hardy boys stood looking on, he would climb among the branches to gather her a handful of blackberries, or venture up a tall tree to get her a bird's nest.

It was quite true, as Emily said, Frank was not a good-looking boy, and his dress was coarse; but he was kind and good-tempered, and a bright boy at his book. I do not think Emily would have found out that he was not pretty if her school-fellows had not made game of him, and they only did it because Frank was always at the head of his class, and they were jealous of him. But the boy who said the most ill-natured things about Frank was Emily's cousin; he was a year older than Frank, with curly hair and red cheeks; he wore fine clothes and went to the dancing-school; he was a dull boy at his book, and could hardly read as well as little Emily, yet he could say spiteful things, and he soon set all the other children to call Frank names.

But Frank did not care about what they said, until he found little Emily would not walk or play with him. For many mornings he tried to meet with her on the way to school, but Emily was always first; and coming home she would keep in the midst of the other girls, and pretend not to see him. But Frank was determined to know the reason why she was so altered, and one morning he rose very early, got through all the work he had to do in the garden and set off on his way to school. He gathered some pretty wild flowers as he went along, and when he came to the turning of the road where he used to wait for her, he sat down on the grass to watch till she came.

Soon he saw her at a distance, but he hid himself until she had got close by, and then coming up to her with a smile, he offered her the bunch of flowers.

Emily was a little startled at seeing him so suddenly, but instead of taking his flowers, she turned her face away, and walked by; but Frank followed her, saying:

"Emily, dear Emily! what have I done that you will not play with me as you used; do tell me—please do!" And Frank laid tight hold of Emily's frock, and would not let her go. She tried to pull her frock out of his hand, but he said he would not leave go till she had told him. Then Emily got cross and said:

"Go away, Frank; I don't want to play with you, and cousin Edmund says you ought not to play with me."

"Why not?" asked Frank.

"Because," said the little girl, "because you are such a homely boy, and you wear such an ugly old jacket;" and snatching her frock suddenly out of his hand, she ran off.

Frank stood alone in the road, and for the first time in his life began to think about his looks. He cast his eyes over his clothes; they were worn and shabby, and they seemed more so when he thought of Edmund's fine velvet jacket and white trousers. Then he ran to the pond beside the road, and looked at the reflection of his face in the water. He saw his sunburnt face, with those large eyes, and that rough, uncut hair, and he remembered Edmund's rosy cheeks and shining curls. He felt quite sure he was, as Emily had said, "a very homely boy," and he sat down on the bank, sad and mortified. Two big tears came to his eyes and rolled down his brown cheeks, for he felt it was very unkind of Edmund to set Emily against him. He sat there for a quarter of an hour, when the bell rang for school.

Frank jumped up suddenly, his eyes brightened and he said: "Never mind, if I am a homely boy, I'm not a dunce! Edmund has a fine jacket, but he cannot write as well as I can; I am always at the head of the class, and I mean to stay there—and if Emily does not want to be my playmate she may let it alone!"

From that day nobody ever saw Frank Leigh playing with the other children, he never idled away his time, but was always learning or working. At school he was so attentive that his master took great pains with him, and he was soon a good scholar, and when he had time he helped the carpenter in his shop, and he cultivated his father's garden so well that the vegetables he raised sold for money, and bought him and his little brothers each a good suit of clothes, while Edmund Price was idle and selfish, and thought only of amusing himself.

Now it happened one day, as the children were coming out of school, that a drover passed by with his dog; it was a savage dog, and when it saw the girls and boys run shouting along it flew at them, and seized Emily by the clothes. Edmund, who had hold of her hand, let go and in a moment jumped over the gate into a garden; the other children ran screaming away, all except Frank, who, seeing nothing else near, seized a great stone and running up to the dog, gave him such a blow on the back with the stone that the animal let go of Emily and, flying at the brave boy, seized him by the arm and threw him on the ground. It would, no doubt, have killed him, but the drover came to his rescue, and got the dog off. Emily, who had run into a cottage terribly frightened, now came out to see if Frank was hurt, and found him in a sad state, for the teeth of the dog had torn his arm open, and the blood was pouring from the wound.

"Oh, Frank! Dear Frank!" exclaimed she, crying bitterly; "you are dreadfully hurt, and all for my sake, too!"

Poor Frank was in great pain, and so faint that he could hardly stand; but Emily helped him back to the school-house, and the master tied up his arm and took him home in a cart. The doctor was sent for, and Frank was sick for two weeks and not able to go to school. Emily went to see him every day, and took him fruit and jellies which her mamma made for him. She would sit and read to him and watch by his side, and one evening when he was in great pain she cried sadly, and coming close to his pillow she whispered:

"Frank, I was very unkind to you, and I feel very sorry; can you forgive me?"

"I never blamed you, Emily," said Frank, turning his face round and kissing her.

* * * * * * *

Emily is now grown a lady; she is fourteen years old. I went to pay a visit to her mamma last summer, and one day I looked out of the parlor window and saw a group of young people in the garden. One I recognized as Edmund Price; he was lying on the grass smoking a cigar. The other was a fine, manly, intelligent-looking youth, and he was showing Emily something through a telescope; that was Frank Leigh. When Emily came into the room I could not help asking her if she did not think Frank a very homely boy?

"No, indeed!" she replied. "He is so kind, and so clever, and so good, that everybody loves him, and no one thinks of his looks."

A Tramp's Victory.

The other day when a tramp stopped a lawyer on Griswold street and begged for a dime to get his dinner, the lawyer replied:

"Why on earth don't you get out into the country?"

"What fur?"

"Get you a piece of land and go to farming."

"My dear sir," said the tramp, "if I had the land, which I can't get, I'd know no more about farming than you do of sailing a ship. You are a smart man—ten times as smart as I am—but can you tell me when to plant corn?"

"Why—ahem—why, in the spring, of course."

"But the month?"

"Well—ahem—I suppose it's along after the snow goes off."

"And about rotation of crops?"

"I—never heard of any."

"And what is sub-soiling?"

"Sub-soiling? Why, it's something connected with farming."

"And how much wheat do you sow to the acre?"

The lawyer couldn't remember whether it was twenty or forty bushels, but dodged the case by observing:

"The great trouble with this country is that we have too many consumers."

"Then how is it that breadstuffs, groceries and clothing are down, and so many factories shutting up? Haven't we really produced too much?" queried the tramp.

"But, as I remarked," continued the lawyer, as he shifted around, "this country can never hope to improve until we have protection."

"Then how comes it that the lumber business, already so heavily protected, is flat as a fish?"

"Say, you shut up!" hotly exclaimed the lawyer as he handed over a quarter and moved off. "As I remarked in my opening address we are living beyond our means."

"Well, I dunno," replied the tramp, as he pocketed the money, "I propose to make this pay for three meals and a bed, and I don't see how you can figger any finer."—Detroit Free Press.

Drying their Peaches.

I took the trouble to ride to Deer Creek, California, said a newspaper correspondent. I thought that I had been suddenly transported to the Garden of Eden. I was in a forest of fruit trees, large and luscious peaches, apples, pears and plums of every variety. The trees were not strong enough to bear their burden, as I notice the greater part of them were propped up with pieces of fence boards. After becoming satiated with fruit I returned to the road and started to Vina. I saw several wagons loaded with peaches, and being driven by Chinamen I inquired whence they were going. One sleepy-looking Chinaman informed me that he did not sabe and had no time to talk. Curiosity prompted me to follow them.

I found they were hauling the peaches to the high lands, where they had scaffolds erected for the purpose of drying the peaches. They cut the peaches in halves, remove the stone and place each half carefully upon the scaffold, taking care to place them so that the sun will shine directly upon the inside of the peach. Starting again to Vina I soon met Clay Delany, who gave me the following items: There are now 1,000 Chinamen engaged drying peaches on Deer Creek. There are peaches enough to keep 500 more employed, but there are no more Chinamen to be had; hence they have sold fifty tons to the Sacramento Cannery. The peanut crop is simply immense. There are more peanuts raised on Deer Creek this year than the whole State ever produced in one year before. I asked Delany why the Chinamen hauled the peaches to the high land to dry them. He answered that there was not room enough in the orchards, and there was no dew on the high lands, consequently they were sooner dried, and as a natural consequence they realized more of their original flavor.

HOW MY BABY DIED.

A PARENT'S GRAPHIC DESCRIPTION OF THE CHILD'S DEATH.

How it Appeared to all Its Different Phases—A Dream and What it Revealed.

The doctor said it was a severe cold, and prescribed for it. He went away and returned in an hour without being called. Then I knew my baby boy was more ill than I had thought, and when he went away, I followed him out of the house and into the snow-burdened air, and said to him:

"Doctor, tell me the truth. Will my baby die?"

"It is very ill," he replied, "but there is yet a little hope." Then I returned and looked again on that sweet face of my little boy. Where dimples had been, were hard white lines of pain. Where the nostrils had been such a soft and velvety pink, you could see the light shine through their walls, and every hair-like vein was blue almost to blackness. The little hands which I was wont to feel patting my cheeks had lost their cunning, and were lying uselessly on its heaving bosom, purple and clenched. I knew my baby was not for long. I knew that even the angels, who loved it a little better than I, were waiting to take it away. I saw the death-dew stand in diamond beads upon its alabaster brow and felt the dampening curls, that clustered like falling sunshine where I had been wont to kiss it. I heard the faint gurgling in my baby's throat, and saw no recognition in its eyes, once so soft and blue, and laughing, but now glassy with the film of death. They were looking through the ceiling and roof of my humble cottage, into the realms where the Recording Angel sat, with the book of life open before him, at a page as white as snow, save where the name was written at the top—the name of my darling boy.

The snow flakes ceased to fall, and the glad sunlight from the west came in through the window and fell upon my baby's bed, flooding it with radiance and glory like that which trembles on the golden tiles of heaven, and then the sun sank out of view, and in the gray twilight my baby lay, struggling body and soul, the one with the other, for the mastery. As the shadows deepened, I saw the bony hand of death reach out from among the pillows, and clutch my baby by the throat. I tried to fight the monster back, but he would not loose his hold.

The lamps were lighted and I saw my baby smile, as if it saw a face more welcome, kind and sweet, than the face of her that bore it, bending over its cradle—the face of Him who said: "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of God," and while it yet smiled, the soul went out from the tabernacle of clay, and left the temple tenantless and cold, but beautiful as life itself. My baby was dead, and I was clasping to my heart only the clay image of its soul, now winging its flight through the boundless depths of blue that lie between the grave and the throne of God. Is it a wonder that men worship idols of clay, when clay is so grandly beautiful as this?

I slept and dreamed, and as I dreamed, I saw the pearly gates swing open, and I knew my baby reached home. I caught a glimpse of heaven, and saw it fly straight to the arms of Him who died upon the cross, and ere the gates were closed, the angel with the book drew his wand across the page and held it up to the others, and I saw that nought but the name of my darling boy was there, written in characters of shining gold; while all the rest was pure and white, and as the gates swung shut, the harps of millions sang a glad refrain.—Through Mail.

Down in Arkansas.

I was on a place yesterday and found an old double log house so nearly rotted down that it is propped up all around, the windows were without glass, the door frames without doors; the children could peer out between the logs in any direction; the lady and friend were sitting in the "gallery," a space between the two cabins, on split chairs, "dipping" snuff, while the lord and master, in dirty, begrimed clothes, sat under a tree, doing nothing, but looking happy as the day is long. Fences rotted down, and lean pigs, with "pokes" on them, two sorry-looking horses trying to pick a living from short grass, and little children, half a dozen or more, with but a single garment on, were listlessly playing in the shade. The lanes, originally poor, with but two or three inches of soil on the prairies, were worn out and abandoned.—Little Rock Letter.

THE FACES.—Dr. Lancaster, of Gainesville, in a letter to the Medical Record, says that many consumptives die in Florida, and their physicians should be censured for sending them away from home when they are beyond all hope of recovery. He believes, however, that many severe cases are cured, and suggests that the American Medical Association appoint a commission of competent scientific men to go to Florida and examine consecutively into the facts.

Homesick for the Prairie.

HOW SUBURBAN CONTRASTS LIFE IN VARIOUS SECTIONS OF AMERICA.

I was just thinking I would like to be sent out West just about now on some commission for an able and enterprising journal, at a large salary, railroad passes, nothing to do and two or three of the boys to help me do it. I just feel a little bit prairie hungry. A Western man never loses his love for the prairies. They call them "prurries" in Indiana, "peraries" in Illinois, "prairs" in Nebraska, "perars" in Kentucky, and "pararies" in Boston; but whatever you call them they are all the same. I would like to hear the wind blowing across the great plains in Kansas, over the beautiful treeless bluff at Manhattan, or along the great ranches out at Larned. You know the wind never blows anywhere else as it does across the prairies. And there it blows all the time, 365 days a year. It roars in your ears now and then like the rush of many waters; it sighs and sings and whispers through the tall, swaying grasses; its song is never monotonous; it varies all day long; and as it sings and whistles it breathes into your soul a sense of perfect freedom, such as you can experience nowhere else.

A mountain is a prison compared with the prairie. The mountain threatens you; it is not loving and tender; it frowns upon you with great gray locks; it never smiles; it scowls with dark ravines and treacherous precipices; it terrifies you with blinding fogs and drifting mists; it swathes its stony, gorgon head in black clouds and speaks to you in muttering syllables of thunder. You cannot breathe in the narrow passes, you cannot run on the steep, rough, winding paths, you bend your head back until your neck aches, to see a little strip of the blue sky. But the prairie—boundless, immense, a billowy sea of emerald, dotted with the rank, bright colored flowers that play with the singing, whistling, whispering winds; the prairie that seems bounded only by the bending sky and the stars; the resin weed gives you the compass and the compass gives you the pass; go where you will and as you please, at a foot pace or at a headlong gallop, free as the free winds that make the prairie their only home. There is no room for them anywhere else.

THE HANDY HOUSEWIFE.

Home-Made Broom-Holders, Cologne Bottles and Napkin-Rings.

A handsome whisk-broom holder for the parlor hall may be made out of a double thickness of card-board, cut into a star and covered with a piece of plain or brocaded velvet or satin. The back is lined with silesia or muslin, and a brass hook is placed on one of the points. A ribbon loop, ending in a bow, serves to hang it on the wall.

Very pretty cologne bottles for the toilet-table are made out of beer bottles. Covers of pale-pink, blue or crimson satin are sewn about them, and a satin ribbon of the same shade passes about the neck and ties in a large bow. The cover is left full at the top, with fringed edges. The corks are covered half-way down with satin and a bow is placed on top.

Serviceable napkin-rings are crocheted out of old-gold macreme cord and are made glossy and stiff by an application of varnish. Work baskets and waste-paper baskets are made in the same way and brightened by bows of ribbon or velvet.

Summer palm-leaf fans may be utilized for winter. Cut off the handles, bind the edges with crimson braid and use for table or lamp mats.

An old derby hat may be converted into a dainty work basket. Cover the outside with shirred satin of any color and tie a broad band of the same about the crown, with a bow and ends on one side. Line the inside with any pretty material, and make a handle of twisted ribbon.

The newest vases are china in bronze and white in the form of a baby's shoe. To make one at home take one of the baby's shoes of any color, cover with bronze or gold waste both inside and out, and place on the what-not.

Long tan silk gloves that have been worn during the summer will make handsome silk mits for evening wear during the winter. Cut off the fingers and hem the tips neatly. Tie the upper end about the arm with tan satin ribbon.—N. Y. Journal.

Spaniards—not Chinamen.

Twenty odd Chinamen arrived at New York from Havana en route for the Flowery Kingdom. When asked if they had had any trouble with the Custom House authorities on account of the law prohibiting the entrance of the Chinese into this country, their leading man said to the reporter: "Mellican law no good. We get naturalized by the Spanish government and then come to New York, not as Chinamen but as Spanish subjects. We pay $25 in Havana for naturalization paper and passport, and that, under the treaty between the United States and Spain, allows us to enter the land without trouble. The French, Peruvians, Mexicans and Chilenos all do the same thing. America is the only country that will not allow Chinese to become citizens."

THE LIME-KILN CLUB.

The President Talks About Ambition With a Living Example Before Him.

[From the Detroit Free Press.]

"If de Hon. Lycurgus Standoff am in de hall to-night he will please step dis way," observed Brother Gardner as the meeting opened with the thermometer marking 108 degrees above zero.

The brother referred to laid down the half of a six-cent muskmelon and advanced to the platform with a look of mingled surprise and anxiety on his face.

"Brudder Standoff," said the President in a voice full of kindness, "you am an ambishus man. You hanker to be great an' famous. You want to climb up. You spend hours preparin' speeches an' addresses an' odder hours in deliberin' 'em befo' emaginary audiences. You sot on de fence an' read of Cassius. You lay on the grass and read of Brutus. While awake you hanker to be a member of de Legislachur, an' in your sleep you dream of risin' to a pint of order in de nex' Congress. Lycurgus!"

"Yes, sah!"

"I goes in to incourage ambishun in the cull'd race, but I mus' at the same time warn you not to lose your common sense. Brutus was a smart man, but he wasn't two months behind on de rent of his cabin. Sisero could hold an audience spell-bound, but his wife didn't hev to go bar' fut fur de want of a dollar pa'r of shoes. Marc Antony could fill a hall on twenty minits' notice, but his chil'en didn't look like seben scare-crows posted on de fence. Socrates saw men bow to his wisdom, but he had a wood-pile at de back door an' 'taters in de cellar fur winter. Lycurgus!"

"Yes, sah!"

"Doan' let go of de rabbit in your hand in order to foller up a 'possum track three days' old. Instead of tryin' to be great, seek to be good. Instead of aching fur de plaudits of a multitude, it am fur better to hev de confidence of one single man whose indorsement on de back of a note will git de cash at a bank. Men who bow befo' a great man talk behin' his back. Fame may tickle your vanity, but fame makes enemies an' brings abuse. Lycurgus!"

"Yes, sah!"

"Ambishun am a creek rushin' frew a hilly kentry. Mingled wid common sense it turns de wheels of mills an' factories, an' becomes a benefit to thousands. The Chinese War Did It.

One of the most curious instances of how matters, apparently the most remote, react upon each other, is found in the distress occasioned in the rural population of West Virginia by the Franco-Chinese war, owing to the fact that the market for ginseng is closed, or dulled, and the price has fallen by a large percentage.

The mountain people of the Alleghany highlands, from Pennsylvania to Tennessee, have long been accustomed, in early spring and late fall, to dig the root of this plant, and prepare it for sale by scalding and cleaning. It was then sold to the country merchants, and served as almost the only means by which the rude dwellers in the interior of the mountains got any ready money, or its equivalent in the few "store-goods" they consumed. Twenty-five years and more ago, the root was worth only about thirty cents a pound, and every little trading centre would export four or five thousand pounds annually. Latterly, however, the mountains became so depleted that the root rose to a dollar a pound in value.

With the exception of a trifle used in our pharmacy, the whole demand for this herb comes from the Chinese, in whose medicinal arts it stands almost first in importance. It is not only regarded as a panacea, but prepared for use in nearly every way a physician can contrive, but takes a superstitious rank, chiefly through the fancied resemblances seen in the gnarled pieces of root to human faces, and a variety of other forms, earthly and celestial.

"Whatever became of Morgan?" said a little boy to his father, who had just become a Mason. The father smiled. "He was never heard of afterward, was he?" The father still smiled. "Then, if he was never heard of again, I know what must have happened to him." "What?" asked the father. "He must have been elected Vice President."—Punch.

DETROIT "FREE PRESS" CURRENCY.

A California farmer has had to pay a fine of $10 for knocking his hired man down with a bunch of grapes weighing ten pounds. It was cheaper than hunting around for a rock.

One issue of a New York daily contains sixty-four advertisements of "pianos for sale cheap because the family is going out of town." None of 'em wants any music where they are going.

Not one post office official in fifty can split the spoils and escape detection and punishment, but every week or two somebody decides to take the chances.

The run-off-with-father's-coachman mania seems to have had its day, and after a few beatings and two or three weeks' diet of cold potatoes the various brides will appear at the front door with tears in their eyes and a case of divorce in their pockets.

A Chicago druggist offers $25,000 reward for the sight of a traveling man who doesn't feel sure that his liver is out of order and needs about six different remedies.

For fourteen long years the people of Dubuque allowed Martin Jackson to run the town because it was believed he was a dangerous man to provoke. The other day a woman half killed him in a row, and now every Dubuquer stops to give Martin a kick.

COME INTO COURT.

A lawyer living on Walnut Hills has a son about seven years old and a daughter about three times that age. The boy has been around the court room a good deal, and the young lady has a solid beau. The other evening the gentleman passed the house and the young lady wanted to see him.

"Johnny," said she to the kid, "won't you please call Mr. Mann?"

Johnny knew the state of affairs, and with a ready "of course," he flew to the front door and called out in the usual loud monotone of a crier:

"John Henry Mann, John Henry Mann, John Henry Mann, come into court."

Mr. Mann came in, and Johnny withdrew to a safe place.—Merchant Traveler.

A GOOD CANDIDATE.

"Pah," said young Johnnie Jarphly, "why don't you run for President?"

"Why, my son?" suspiciously asked Mr. Jarphly.

"You'd make a good candidate."

"Do you think so?" replied the elder Jarphly, quite flattered.

"Yes, for mah says no one could say anything too bad about you."—Pittsburg Chronicle.

"What branches do you find most useful to your pupils?" asked a visitor of a professor at the University of Texas.

A GOOD AGENT.

A newspaper proprietor advertised for an advertisement canvasser, and his test of their fitness, as they applied, was to tell them to get out of the office that instant or he would kick them out. Several timid young men turned tail and left him with great disgust, but one, more brazen-faced than the rest, nothing daunted by the threat, coolly sat down and said he would not go until his testimonials had been read. So he locked the door, put the key in his pocket, and handed in his papers. "Ah!" said the advertiser, "you'll do, I can see. I don't want testimonials; your style is enough for me. No one will ever succeed as an advertisement canvasser who will be influenced by a threat to be kicked out of any office."

NEXT TO THE LATEST.

"This is the latest agony in bonnets," she remarked to her husband as she tried its effects in the mirror.

"Is it paid for?" he asked.

"No; I had it charged."

"Well, it isn't the latest agony in 'connets, then," he replied with a groan.

A LITTLE FLATTERY.

"Won't you please discharge my husband for me?" said the pretty wife of James Dunn at the Tombs yesterday.

"Do you feel lonesome?" asked Justice Duffy.

"Oh, well, you know how it is yourself," she replied.

"I don't; I am not a married man," said the Justice.

"Oh, a bachelor; what a pity! You would make such a fine husband. I—"

"Clerk, give this woman a discharge for her husband. Tell him not to get drunk again."—N. Y. World.

CHILTON VIEW.

Published Every Thursday Morning.

CLANTON, ALA., NOV. 20, 1884.

Hon. Thos. W. Sadler, our Congressman elect, was married on last Friday, the 14th inst., at Prattville to Miss Mamie Bowen.

A nine-ton lump of coal, claimed as the largest ever mined, will represent the coal interest of Birmingham, Ala., at the New Orleans Exposition.

A Chinese doctor at Victoria, B. C., is reported to have made some remarkable cures in cases where white physicians had given them up as incurable.

The New Orleans Exposition will not be formally opened on the first of December, as heretofore announced, but on Thursday, December the 18th, at 12 o'clock. The management announce that exhibits will be received until December 10th, on account of the delay in opening.

The Legislature is being overrun with unimportant local legislation to the neglect of that which is of the greatest importance to the entire State. There seems to be no remedy for this miserable state of affairs. If it continues the State Code will have to be revised every year. A law should be enacted by which a fine of $100 could be assessed against any member who introduces a bill of a local nature which is not of urgent importance. The Courts and the State Treasury would profit by such a law.

The long protracted agony of suspense is over. The New York vote, which decides the election has been revised and counted by the board of supervisors; but the result varys but little from the published returns. Cleveland and Hendricks are elected, and unless lightning strikes them, will administer the government after the fourth of March. May they adopt as a motto for their official acts, "Be just, though the heavens fall;" and they will retire from office, after four years, with honor for themselves, and hapiness for the people.

DEAR VIEW—The great political battle is over. Democratic victory looms up as an assured fact. The rejoicing over this important event throughout the South is without a parallel in the history of national elections. Marion had to put in her grand hurrah to swell the chorus of spontaneous enthusiasm, that filled the land when the welcome news of Cleveland's success came flashing over the wires. Our Howard boys brought the cannon into service and fired fifty salutes. Fireworks of every description blazed around.

Speeches were made by extempore orators, and bursts of acclamation rent the air.

Marion has just closed her annual fair. It was a success, we learn from reports. Fine exhibits of agricultural machinery and blooded stock. One of the attracting features was a balloon ascension.

The genuine "Bill Arp" gave our citizens one of his feasts of wit the other night. One of our theos, himself a wit of no small measure, spoke of it in high terms.

Howard boys have the New Orleans Exposition on the brain. An effort will be made to take our cadets there sometime during the Winter. The good department of the cadets will be an honor to their college wherever they go.

The Judson girls are now in full uniform. They are a fine specimen of Alabama's grace and beauty. It would take the eyes of any boy to see them in line of march to and from church on Sabbath mornings.

Before we close we must again return thanks for remembrances from our Chilton friends. One of these tokens is a nice quilt from one of Verbena's working bands of christian ladies. Another is a good second hand coat, that will help to rig us out as a cadet, from Verbena's pastor, a former Howard boy.

BIJOU.

ED. VIEW—In your issue of Oct. 30th, "Allons" suggests to our Legislature, now assembled at Montgomery, a bill to punish the person who provokes a difficulty, or attempts to do so by insult, by a fine of $500. His suggestion has my approval. He says, very truthfully, if such a law was put in force, the lives of many good men would be saved. But there's the rub. The judicial system as it now exists will not execute the laws already made. Let us have an improvement in that line first.

Give us the Dallas county jury law, or a better one;—or better still, give us a bench of Judges instead of a jury (were the constitution out of the way.)

"Allons further suggests the abolishment of the penitentiary system; but he suggests nothing in its stead. I differ with him radically on that subject. The principal reason why it does not suppress crime, is that our judicial system will not put the scoundrels in with any degree of certainty—that is, the white criminal class. The system works well enough on the colored brother. He gets his just deserts, and serves the State like a little man. But the white criminal class has more money, brains and influence, and it is almost an impossibility to convict a white criminal. I believe there has been two hundred bills for felony obtained against white men in this county, since it has been a county—twelve or fourteen years—and but three of them have gone to the penitentiary. I am sustained in this statement, by a former prosecuting officer of this county. No wonder the fear of the penitentiary does not deter white men from evil doings.

The object in punishing crime, is to deter men from committing it. The practical working of our judicial system, according to this rule seems to say, "we care not to promote the good morals of white men, so we can keep the negro straight." I know this is not the sentiment of any good citizen, yet actions speak louder than words. I know of no better practical way of punishing criminals, than by working them in the mines. The interest of the State alone, should be consulted; for, it matters not what kind of work convicts may do, they must compete with honest men; and it has as well be one class as another. All this howling about the taking the bread out of honest men's mouths, is the merest nonsense; and if carried to its legitimate results, would lock up the convict in a cell, and feed and clothe him at the expense of the public.

Q.

CLEVELAND SURELY ELECTED.

Blaine Gives Up.

New York, Nov. 15.—The total figures in this State according to the official canvass, New York county alone being excluded, are as follows:

Blaine received	471,606
Cleveland received	423,948
Butler received	15,569
St. John received	25,915

Blaine had pluralities in 45 counties, which aggrigated 68,459, and Cleveland had pluralities in 14 counties which aggregated 26,501. Blaine's net plurality outside of New York county was 41,958 In New York county the canvass was at 6 p. m. not complete as to the 7th, 9th and 13th Assembly Districts. Without reckoning any change in them the official canvass has given Blaine gains of 143 and losses of 247. It has given Cleveland gains of 336 and losses of 513. Blaine's total net game 21 of the 24 election districts is therefore 63. So; posing the other three districts to remain unchanged and subtracting the net gain of Blaine in this county from Cleveland's plurality, the plurality for Cleveland in New York State is 1,212

New York, Nov. 15, 9 p. m.—The board of canvassers completed the canvass of 712 election districts of this city this evening. The first election district of the 18th assembly district returned 54 votes to Blaine electors while it was evident that the number should have been 81. The committee on correction will rectify the error and report in favor of 81 votes on Monday morning. With that return in the official count for lowest Democratic elector in this city is 133,177, and for the highest Republican 90,003. Giving the lowest Cleveland elector a plurality of 43,084.

10 p. m.—Official figures for the 7th, 9th and 13th assembly districts were not announced until to-night. They are as follows:

Seventh—Blaine, 4,382; Cleveland, 4,620; Butler, 106; St. John, 84.

Ninth—Blaine, 4,681; Cleveland, 5,275; Butler, 125; St. John, 124.

Thirteenth—Blaine, 4,876; Cleveland, 4,530; Butler, 131; St. John, 100.

These show that Blaine's vote in New York city was 89,977, Cleveland's 125,063, Butler's 3,376, and St. John's 1,160. Blaine's gains were 328 and his losses 257. Cleveland's gains were 520, and his losses 513. Total vote in the State was: Blaine 564,883, Cleveland 562,961, Butler 16,945, and St. John 29,076, this makes Cleveland's plurality in the State 1,078.

Blaine Gives It Up.

Boston, Nov. 15.—A special to the Herald from Augusta, Me., says Mr. Blaine regards the official count in New York as practically settling the Presidential question. Blaine, it is said on the best authority, received this afternoon a telegram from New York, announcing the completion of the official canvass in that city and informing him that the plurality for Cleveland in that State would be 1,137. The same authority states that Blaine accepts the result very cheerfully, and has no regrets growing out of his connection with the campaign. He feels that he made a good fight, and he gracefully bows to the verdict of the American people. He believes the Republican party will prove true to its grand past and will increase in strength in coming years. He expects in 1888 it will again be called back into power. Blaine leaves for Washington the middle of next week, where his family will spend the winter. He has leased the Sargeant house, in Faraget Square, and will shortly resume his work on the second volume of "Twenty Years in Congress." The volume will be ready by next June for publication.

Stanton.

Seeing the following inquiry in your Calliervill correspondents last editorial, "Where is Stanton?" I shall endeavor to answer the query.

Stanton is a growing village on the E. T. V. & Ga. R. R.—just one mile above Calliervill. Two years ago the woods resounded only to the music of hunter's horn, and the baying of the hounds. To-day the land is filled with the echoes of the saw, the hammer, and the ring of the anvil. As if by magic, a little city has sprung into existence Messrs. Gregory & Co., recognizing the advantages of this section, erected their capacious lumber mill here and were the first to clear the way for a rising town. They soon gave the place a "local habitation and a name" by building neat and substantial cottages for their employees.

Two months since, the Shelby Iron Company commenced the burning of charcoal at this place. Many of their employees have bought building sites and are erecting neat little houses in and around Stanton. The company employs about 150 men and when fairly started to work will ship 2,000 bushels of charcoal daily.

A Georgia capitalist is, at this writing, preparing to add another industry to our little town, in the shape of a furniture factory. The engine for this purpose has already arrived, and is of about 15 horse-power. As our woods abound in oak, ash, elm, poplar, bay, to say nothing of the pine. There is really no reason why the finest grades of furniture cannot be manufactured here as well as in any portion of the state.

Lately we have attained an express office here, and in the near future, a telegraph office will be added to our list of advantages. A new switch for the convenience of the iron and lumber companie is being put down now.

We have two schools in the neighborhood; a good Methodist church edifice, in which we have services twice a month. Our society is quite as good as in any other part of the county. Several gentlemen from neighboring cities have bought lots and intend to make summer homes here to escape the heat and dust of the city.

Our woods abound in springs of the purest, coldest water, the climate is delightful and every thing combines to make this one of the healthiest, most pleasant and attractive places in Alabama. We only extend the invitation of coming over and [illegible] quite well that [illegible] us in our estimation [illegible]

LOCAL DOTTINGS.

Hunt & Bro.'s mill is now running.

Mr. Lucien Day has returned to Clanton.

There are rumors of mariages floating about.

Mrs. H. J. Callen has returned from a visit to Selma.

Miss Bettie Duramus, of Jemison, paid her friends in Clanton a visit last week.

Mrs. W. A. Collier and family has just returned from a lengthy visit to relatives in South Alabama.

Mrs. George Bivings, who has been spending some time with her parents near Clanton, has returned to her home in Birmingham.

Miss Bettie Anderson, of Jemison, spent several days with her friends in Clanton last week. Miss Bettie is a charming young lady and will always be welcomed to Clanton.

The boss is off, and has left the devil and the religious editor in charge. He says he guesses we will "paint it red" in his absence; but as Beacher has abolished hell, and so left the devil homeless, we intend to show him that the lamb and the lion can now lie down together.

Mr. J. M. Parish killed an albino squirrel last week, while hunting on the Coosa river. The tail is somewhat smaller than that of the common gray squirrel, but with that exception, there is no difference, save, of course, in the albino being perfectly whith, even to its claws and eyes.

A very destructive fire occured in the Kincheon neighborhood on Monday evening, the 10th inst. Mr. Robert Williams had his house burned and lost everything in the way of household and house furnishing goods. His sympathizing neighbors raised money to help him in his trouble and loss.

The young folks of our town had a leap-year party at the residence of Mr. John Gullaborn, on last Friday evening, at which, every body seemed to have a jolly time. Every young man behaved himself in a very modest and lady-like manner; and the young ladies set the gentlemen such an example in politeness and attentiveness, as, it is to be hoped, they will not soon forget. Altogether, it was a very elegant and unique affair. Let's have another one.

Smith & Montgomery, at Birmingham, are the leading book sellers and stationers. Their stock of school books and miscellaneous books is large and complete. They carry every thing in the stationery line comprising blank books, inks, &c., and make a specialty of fine photograph and autograph albums. They solicit correspondence. Orders will be promptly filled at lower figures than any other book store in Alabama. When you go to Birmingham, be sure to call and see them. oct-23-tf.

Stanton Dots.

Our little village is still growing. We have two stores, two schools, and hope soon to have another church.

Several new residences have lately been built, more are in process of construction, and during the ensuing Fall and Winter several neat cottages will be erected by gentlemen from Selma who have bought lots here with the view of making it the Summer residence of their families. We now have a post office and an express office. As soon as the side track, now in process of construction, is finished we will have a depot and telegraph office. This will greatly facilitate the shipment of the immense quantities of lumber and charcoal which are produced here. The Gregory & Co. Lumber Co. still maintain their well deserved reputation for producing nothing but a first class article, have plenty orders, and are doing a fine business.

Stanton is still the magic village of this section and looks forward to a prosperous future. MORE ANON.

Federal Aid to Education.

Meridian Mercury.

Hon. W. H. Barnes, Democratic presidential elector in Alabama, opposes federal aid to education in the South. His opposition is based upon the supposed tendency of such action toward centralization. There seems to be a growing opposition in Alabama to this measure. Other public men in that state have announced objections to it. We think this opposition movement is a little hasty. The Northern friends of the measure will consent to place all the control of the funds with the southern states, and there is no more danger than in a distribution of surplus funds from land sales, or any other source, among the states. We are greatly in need of this aid and it would at once lift our public school systems out of the mire. In some of the gulf states the whole fabric of the public schools is a failure for the want of funds. The inefficiency of school boards comes generally from an insufficiency of money. No county or township board can accomplish anything useful, when the pay of teachers is limited to twenty or thirty dollars a month. Only ignorant and worthless teachers, as a rule, can be procured at such figures, and the boards, finding all efforts to establish thorough schools vain, give up in despair and let the schools take care of themselves. Give them more money and a very different state of things will soon appear. We think, therefore that all aid offered by the government, if placed under state control, should be accepted without hesitation. The "scare" of centralization is unfounded and premature.

M. Paul Bert is striving to secure for women doctors the privilege of walking the hospitals of Paris. He is warmly opposed by some of the most eminent physicians—men who believe that women doctors may become of great benefit to the world, but not as the responsible heads of hospitals for both sexes.

A Lady's Opinion.

Mrs. Geo. Gilbert, Bryan, Ohio, writes: "Dr. S. B. HARTMAN & Co., Columbus, Ohio: I commenced on the fifth bottle of your PERUNA this morning, and should eat as soon think of doing without my meals as without my medicine. I have been doctoring for about four years, and kept getting worse all the time and was just giving up in despair when I got one of your books, "The Ills of Life." I was in bed at the time. I read and re-read your book and felt like trying your medicine. My folks thought there was no use in trying anything more, I was too far gone, and might as well make up my mind to die. I told them PERUNA was the medicine I needed, and I intended to try a bottle. It proved a success in breaking the chills, and if it had not done one thing more, I would have been satisfied. But it has done more, and I feel like another person. Everybody that sees me is surprised to see me looking so well, as they all thought I was dying with consumption, and now my own folks have as much to say for the PERUNA as I recommend it to everybody I see.

"We were two of our neighbors in yesterday inquiring about the PERUNA. I gave the one my book to read; told her to bring it back, as I prized it very highly. The other got the name of the PERUNA to send to his son in Chicago. He is a telegraph operator. My disease is something similar to Mrs. Milo Ingram's, though nothing compared to hers, so bad. There was a lump raised on my collar bone, and it was a long time before it looked like opening. The doctor said he would have to lance it in a few days, but I thought I would attend to that myself, so I put a little fly blister on it and it opened; then I put a poultice on and then salve, and kept the sales on all the time. It got so bad it spread down my left shoulder, and one place broke my left breast. There were two places on my head, one near the temple and one back of my ear that it spread and swelled. No comfort since I was afflicted. My hand is so strange to me that I thought I was getting crazy. Since I have used the PERUNA (I don't use the salve any more) my sores healed up right away. And oh, what a relief it is to get around without chilling and having to suffer with my sores. I feel like letting everybody know all about it."

John Ferguson, Gallitzin, Pa., writes: "Your PERUNA is a good medicine, and we sell lots of it. Will you please send us some more 'Ills of Life,' with a few German."

Interesting to Ladies.

Our lady readers can hardly fail to have their attention called this week to the latest combination of improvements in that most useful of all domestic implements, the "sewing machine."

As we understand it, a machine for family use should meet first of all these requirements: It should be simple in its mechanism; it should run easily; it should do a wide range of work; it should be as nearly noiseless as possible; it should be light, handsome, durable, and as cheap as is consistent with excellence throughout.

These conditions the "Light-Runing New Home" certainly meets. It has also several very important and useful attachments and "notions" of its own, which go far to make good its claims to popular favor.

The "New Home" specially recommends itself to purchasers on account of its superior mechanical construction, ease of management and reasonable price. Over half a million have been sold in the last three years, all of which are giving universal satisfaction. This unrivaled machine is manufactured by the New Home Sewing Machine Co., Orange, Mass., and 30 Union Square, New York.

WANTED—A LITTLE GIRL.

Where have they gone to—the little girls,
With natural manners and natural curls?
Who love their dollies and like their toys,
And talk of something besides the boys?

Little old women in plenty I find,
Mature in manners and old of mind,
Little old flirts who talk of their "beaux"
And vie with each other in stylish clothes.

Little old belles, who, at nine and ten,
Are sick of pleasure and tired of men,
Weary of travel, of balls, of fun—
And find no new thing under the sun.

Once, in the beautiful long ago,
Some dear little children I used to know;
Girls who were merry as lambs at play,
And laughed and rollicked the livelong day.

They thought not at all of the "style" of their clothes,
They never imagined that boys were "beaux"—
"Other girls' brothers" and "mates" were they;
Splendid fellows to help them play

Where have they gone to? If you see
One of them, anywhere, send her to me.
I would give a medal of purest gold
To one of those dear little girls of old.
With an innocent heart and an open smile,
Who knows not the meaning of "flirt" or "style."

ELLA WHEELER.

The Love-Letter

Miss Orinthia Brown set down her tea-cup with an emphasis that made all the china rattle. And little Mrs. Meeker jumped nervously at the sound.

"I never heard anything so ridiculous in all my life," said Miss Brown, derisively. "Gilbert Mott in love with Georgia Arlington! Why, she's a mere doll, with big blue eyes, and pink cheeks and yellow curls."

"She's very fascinating in her manners," Mrs. Meeker ventured to remark.

"Oh, pshaw!" was Miss Orinthia's contemptuous comment. "And you really think he's in love with her?"

"Yes, I must say that I think so."

"Ah-h-h!" said Orinthia, meaningly. "If I only dared to tell you all!"

"Dear me!" said Mrs. Meeker, eagerly; "what do you mean?"

"Nothing," said Miss Brown, with a nod of her head. "He walked home from church last night with me, didn't he?"

"Yes, but——"

"He stayed on my side of the room all the time we were decorating the fair-rooms with evergreens, didn't he?"

"Yes, but that was because——"

"And—but never mind, never mind!" said Miss Orinthia, mysteriously. Time will show! Georgia Arlington, indeed—why she's nothing but a child—a mere school-girl! I know better!"

"Do tell me, Miss Orinthia," pleaded Mrs. Meeker. "Is he really engaged to her?"

Miss Orinthia pursed up her lips, dropped her eye-lids with a manner that was wonderfully eloquent, but she would commit herself no further!

"Let's go up stairs and finish dressing those china dolls for the grab-bag," said Miss Brown. "We shall get more money out of the grab-bag than anything else, and we must be sure and have it well furnished!"

While the tea-drinking ceremonial had been going on in the lower part of the mansion of Mrs. Meeker, quite a different chain of circumstances was transpiring above stairs. Mr. Gilbert Mott, who had been inveigled into the snares of the Ladies' Fair, nolens volens, had come early to help in the last preparations, and, walking up to the work-room, had surprised a lovely blue-eyed lassie in the occupation of filling sundry cones of bright-hued paper with sugar plums and French bon-bons.

Georgia Arlington shook back her sunny curls and blushed like a June rosebud, as she started up!

"Don't go, Miss Arlington, please!" pleaded Gilbert, himself not unembarrassed. But Georgia muttered something about a roll of ribbon which she had forgotten, and fluttered past him ere he could remonstrate further.

Gilbert looked after her, with a whimsical expression of despair on his countenance.

"Now, why does she run away from me like that?" he said to himself. "Probably because she knows it tantalizes me! But I'll be even with her yet—if she won't let me tell her how dearly I love her, I'll write it to her!"

And heedless of the neglected piles of cedar-sprigs and princess-pine, yet waiting to be wrought into garlands, he sat down to the table and seizing pen and ink, began a passionate billet-doux after the following fashion:

"MY OWN PRECIOUS DARLING:

"Why are you so cold and cruel to me? Why will you not let me tell you in words what you must so often have read in my eyes—the story of my heart's devotion. For I love you and have loved you, and shall love you to the world's end, and you must have seen it for yourself during the last few days that we have been working together for the church fair. Yet you will not give me a word or a glance of encouragement!

"Is this right, my ruthless queen of hearts? But I am determined that you shall tell me when we meet again, whether I may hope or not! Until then, sweet one, I am, half in despair, half hopeful,

"Yours, over, and unalterably,
"G. M."

He had just scribbled off this unsatisfied effusion, when the sound of footsteps on the stairs chased away the soft shadows of his love-dream, and he had just time to slip the paper under a leaf of Norway spruce twigs, when Mrs. Meeker and Miss Orinthia Brown entered.

"All work so soon!" cried the latter, archly. "Isn't he industrious, Mrs. Meeker?"

"Yes," said Gilbert, hypocritically. "I'm at work already!"

So he was—but not exactly for the fair.

He watched nervously for an opportunity to possess himself of the precious sheet of paper, without observation, but Miss Orinthia, doubtless prompted by some baleful evil spirit, hovered around the green boughs, like a disappointed turtle-dove, and obviously suspected his designs, and pertinaciously as was borne down alsim in the popular current, to open some boxes of luxuriance, which had just arrived by express.

"I can easily come back to get it when they are busy cooking over the new things," he thought.

But—fit illustration this of the futility of all human plans—when he came rejoicing back, some twenty minutes or so later, the sheet was gone.

Gone, leaving no trace or vestige behind—gone, utterly and entirely!

"I believe there has been some superhuman agency at work!" thought our bewildered hero, as he tumbled over the chaotic contents of the table in vain.

But Mr. Mott was wrong. The agency had been exceedingly human—no other in fact than mischievous little Billy Arlington, come up in search of stray prizes for the famous Grab-bag which had been temporarily delivered into his hands. Cornucopias, pin-cushions, scent-bags, needle-books he pounced on alike, and, perceiving a sheet of pink paper, written on, he crumpled it into an old envelope, directed "Miss Orinthia A. Brown," which lay beyond.

"What larks it will be," thought the incorrigible Billy. "Some of the girls'll think they've got a love-letter, and oh, how mad they'll be, when they find it ain't nothing but one of Rintley's receipts or crochet patterns."

And away rushed Master Billy, little recking of the mischief he was unwittingly working to the cause of True Love!

The evening of the fair came—and the pretty rooms, made still prettier by paper roses and evergreen garlands, were crowded with the brave, the fair, and some that were neither one nor the other! Georgia Arlington, presiding at one of the tables, looked lovely enough to drive half a dozen young men distracted, instead of one, and Miss Orinthia, in a rustling slate-colored silk dress, went about like an autumn leaf in a high wind! The grab-bag circulated from hand to hand, carrying, as in the wont of these institutions, a little current of merriment and laughter in its wake! Georgia drew a cigar case—Mr. Mott became the proprietor of a rag doll and Miss Orinthia Brown drew—a letter, addressed to herself.

Gilbert Mott, leaning against the doorway, saw Miss Brown hurrying up to Georgia and displaying her prize with a malicious glee; while Georgia colored and bit her lip, and looked ready to cry, and feigned a merry little ripple of laughter, all in one and the same breath.

"Why don't that horrid old maid keep away from Georgia Arlington!" thought our discontented hero. "She looks like a dried up bunch of raisins beside a cluster of blooming Isabella grapes."

And watching his opportunity he slipped through the crowd and edged up to the table where Georgia was selling pin cushions and tape trimmings at an exorbitant price.

"Georgia!" he whispered softly, "Georgia!"

But she turned her head haughtily away.

"Please to excuse me, Mr. Mott," she said coolly.

While Gilbert was staring at her in amazement a hand was slipped through his arm, and Miss Orinthia Brown drew him gently away.

"Where are you going?" he demanded, rather unwillingly.

"Just outside the door, one minute," whispered Miss Orinthia falteringly. "It is not in the tumult of a common crowd that such words should be spoken!"

"What words? I haven't an idea what you mean!" cried the young man.

Orinthia drew into the hall, her head drooped on his shoulder.

"Yes," she faltered, "yes! How could you for a moment doubt it!"

"Doubt what? Excuse me, Miss Brown, but I think your wits are forsaking you," said Gilbert Mott, striving to extricate himself from the damsel's grasp.

"Gilbert, would you, then, be false to me?" sobbed Orinthia, with the dawning symptoms of hysterics.

"I! False to you?" echoed our hero. "Miss Brown, will you be so good as to tell me at once, and plainly, what you are speaking about?"

Orinthia Brown's sallow cheeks reddened, her eyes sparkled ominously, as she drew from her pocket the precious missive.

"Do you mean to say, sir, that you didn't write this letter?" she demanded.

Gilbert took the letter and scrutinized it closely.

"Yes, of course, I wrote the letter."

"Then, dearest——"

"Stop, though," he interrupted, frantically. "It wasn't to you."

"Not to me!"

"No! Do you suppose I want to marry you!"

Miss Orinthia uttered a shrill shriek—but the next moment she was alone. Gilbert Mott had vanished.

For the matter was growing serious now. If Georgia were to be won, she must be won at once, before Fate conspired with any other old maid to deprive him of her coveted love.

"Georgia," he said, planting himself resolutely beside her. "I have got something I want to say to you."

"You had a great deal better say it to your beloved Miss Orinthia," cried Georgia, tossing her flaxen curls.

"But she isn't my beloved Miss Orinthia," cried Gilbert.

"I suppose you will be denying your own handwriting next," said Georgia, indignantly. "But it's of no use; I saw the letter myself."

"But, Georgia, the letter was written to you."

"Then," said Georgia, brightening up a little, "how did she get it?"

"That's just what I can't comprehend myself," said Gilbert; "but one thing I'm very certain of—I love you, and you alone, and I won't leave you till you tell me whether the love is returned."

And he did not; neither was it necessary for him to say three very long

IN FRIGHTFUL PERIL.

Narrow Escape of Six Men from a Fearful Caisson—Thirty Feet Under Water.

A dispatch from Havre de Grace Md., says:—The outer shell or coffer dam of caisson No. 2, which is being sunk as the foundation for one of the piers of the new bridge of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, now in process of construction, spanning the Susquehanna River at this point, gave way about seven o'clock in the morning. The crib and air lock shaft were flooded and the working chamber rapidly filled. Most of the men got out safely before the accident occurred, but Patrick Kelley and five of his men named Maguire, Shoroder, Dilion, Welsh and Conners were imprisoned in the submarine chamber.

The caisson is larger than any of the others sunk for the bridge. It is sixty feet long and forty feet wide, and at the time of the accident the working chamber was sixty feet below the surface of the water. The entrance to the caisson proper is made through a perpendicular iron shaft about three feet in diameter, with foot and hand holds on either side. It is divided into locks, each lock having a gate. When the men descend the lock-tender withdraws the air and the gate falls and the last man down lifts the gate. When the bottom gate is opened the air rushes in, thus holding the top gate in position. The same process is repeated until they reach the working chamber, which is brilliantly lighted by electricity. The air in the chamber, beyond being a little oppressive, is said to be not unpleasant. The work of excavating is being pushed night and day, on Sundays as well as on week days. Each shift is allowed twenty men and a foreman.

The men were working under a pressure of twenty-eight pounds at the time of the collapse, and when the lock flooded the only entrance or exit to and from the caisson was cut off. The air apparatus, however, fortunately continued to work, and this was the men's only salvation. They remained in their prison helpless until rescued by the superintendent, John O'Brien, who conceived an ingenious plan about eleven o'clock, and quickly put it into practice. The outer lock was five feet under water, and the next lock, which was fifteen feet deep, was full of water. Mr. O'Brien made a dam of boards and calked it tightly with oakum and cement. Then he bailed out the water, descended and raised the flooded lock and bailed that out.

In company with John Burns he descended through their rudely constructed shaft and amid the ringing cheers of excited and anxious spectators rescued the six men who an hour before were in such a perilous situation. The men were pale, haggard, exhausted and muddy. With the exception of one, whose head was cut by a falling spike, they were uninjured. This act of Messrs. O'Brien and Burns will not soon be forgotten, at least by any of the six who were imprisoned twelve hours in a submarine cavern. General William Hoy Smith, one of the contractors, and Col. William Patton, the company's engineer, were there, and viewed the operations with anxiety. General Smith liberally rewarded the rescuers for their gallant conduct and the rescued for their endurance.

The Old Rice Story.

A captain of a North River sloop, having hired a new cook at Albany, set him to cooking rice, which he said he had done one hundred times.

Telling him that he would find fifteen pounds in the locker, and cautioning him about cooking too much, the captain went about his business of loading his vessel with pig iron.

In half an hour the new cook rushed out, exclaiming:

"Say, captain, don't take on any more pig iron; we will have a load of boiled rice before night."

The captain rushed into the cabin, where he found all the pots, kettles, pans and tubs full to overflowing with cooked rice, which was also seething over the top of the kettle and falling upon the stove and floor.

"What you been doin'?" yelled the skipper, as he glanced around. "How much rice did you put in the pot?"

"Put the whole of it, cap," said the lad; "and I've been doin' nothin' but bailin' out rice for the last twenty minutes. Where does all the stuff come from?"

The Cork Duck.

A pleasant trick to look at was one given us by an Egyptian juggler. He took a cocoanut shell with one end cut off, and filled it with water. In the water he placed a little piece of cork, having a bent pin on one side, and two straight pins on the other side, so that the cork as it floated roughly resembled a lilliputian duck. The cork lay dead in the water, and it was difficult to think what magic could possibly be got out of it. Presently the juggler, sitting about two yards off, took out a musical instrument and began to play a lively tune. Instantly the imitation duck commenced to dance violently in the water, suiting its motions to the music. The dancing continued till the tune was ended; then the juggler ordered the duck to salaam; and he was at once obeyed. He even requested the buoyant cork to dive to the bottom of the water; and his request was immediately complied with. While the performance was going on the cocoanut shell was standing almost at our feet, and the performer was not only sitting beyond reach, but both his hands were employed playing the instrument.

Sixteen Sacramento women opened a co-operative store, and in three months two of them owned the concern, and the other fourteen were watching every the "co-op." came to.

A Remarkable Structure.

The new Cathedral of St. Savior at Moscow is a remarkable structure. It was built to commemorate the departure of the French army from Moscow. Three months after the retreat of the French a decree ordering the building of a memorial temple was issued by Alexander I. Plans were promptly prepared, but little progress was made for ten years, although the architect and building committee during that period succeeded in expending 4,000,000 roubles, for which they were banished, and their estates confiscated. The Emperor Nicholas adopted new plans, and selected the present site, which cost upward of £180,000. At the outset a nunnery and 70,000 cubic feet of earth had to be removed. On the 27th of July, 1838, the foundation stone was laid, and for twenty years the building slowly proceeded. In 1858 the scaffolding, which cost £40,000, was removed. Yet a quarter of a century more was required to complete the fittings and decoration. The style is ancient Russian. The five copper cupolas, for the gilding of which was required 900 pounds of gold, cost £170,000. The domes are surmounted by crosses, the centre one being 30 feet high, and 340 feet from the ground. The largest bell weighs 26 tons.

The whole edifice is faced with marble, the doors are of bronze, ornamented with biblical subjects and lined with oak. The principal entrance is 30 feet high and 18 feet broad; two of the doors weigh 13 tons, and the total cost of all the doors was £62,000. The building is erected in the form of a Greek cross; the walls are adorned with frescoes illustrating the chief events in the history of the Russian Church. The total cost of the marble in the building exceeded £300,000; the galleries contain thirty-six windows, and the cupolas sixteen, all double, with frames of bronze. Round the cupola is one row of 640 candelabra, which cost £27,000, and a second row of 600, costing £12,000; there are four lustres, weighing four tons each; the total number of candles to be lighted throughout the building is upward of 3,000; the cost of material and workmanship, aside from the altar space, was £36,000; throughout the building are many of the most remarkable paintings produced by Russian artists; the whole cost of the structure is placed at two and a quarter millions of pounds sterling, and it is said to be capable of containing 10,000 worshipers.

The Woodcock's Wooing.

Woodcock have certain peculiarities which endear them to the sportsman as well as make them an interesting study to men of science. Their love-making is essentially their own. Early in the spring the male bird, seeking a mate, repairs to some well-known covert where the females most do congregate. It is just at sunset. All day long he has been industriously filling himself full of long, lucious worms, and as nightfall comes his bird thought turns to affairs more sentimental. When he reaches the parade ground he looks anxiously around, and if no suspicious noise jars on his sensitive ears he begins with a low introductory overture. Then he grows impatient and utters loud, guttural bleatings, clucking just before each one. Then he struts up and down the mossy bank as if his performance gave him intense satisfaction. Then he considers himself fairly introduced, and, taking wing, rises in the air, flying up in spiral circles, each growing smaller as he ascends. During this flight he utters a low, sweet, cooing noise. After sailing about in a series of aerial somersaults, he swoops down to the spot of his starting. For hours he fools about, displaying his wing performances, until at last the female can no longer resist his antics, and throwing coquetry, as Hamlet did the physic, to the dogs, she approaches with ruffled feathers and dishevelled plumage. The two then meet and caress each other with every evidence of affection and all the by-plays of love thrown in, and locking their long bills in each other's grasp, as if too happy for earth, they rise straight in the air and fly far out of sight in the darkness.

Land Sales for a Year

From a statement prepared at the Land Office, in Washington, D. C., showing the disposal of the public lands for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1884, it appears that the cash sales amounted to 6,317,847 acres from which were realised $10,302,582. The original homestead entries included 7,831,509 acres, the final homestead entries 2,915,574 acres, and the timber culture entries 4,094,463 acres. The miscellaneous disposals aggregated 8,600,219 acres, including 8,343,154 acres of railroad lands, for which the sum of $1,536,410 was received. The aggregate number of acres of land disposed of under all heads, including the final homestead entries, was 26,834,041, and the aggregate receipts were $11,838,992. This is an increase over the disposals of last year of 8,101,-137 acres, and of $1,075,521. Indian lands to the amount of 697,128 acres, which were sold for $930,297, are not included in the foregoing totals.

In Town or Knickerbockers.

MR. FOGG—As I came by the station just now I saw a baby in its carriage. It was amusing to see the little thing watch the locomotive as it rushed past and until it was out of sight. I wonder what the little darling was thinking of!

BOGG—That depends. If it was again she was thinking, "splendid!" "just too lovely for anything!" or something of that sort. If it was a boy, he might have been mentally constructing a smoke-consumer or patent coupler, but probably was considering whether it was best to invest in the road's common or preferred stock, its first, second or third mortgage bonds, its equipment or—hand-grant rights or the west Minnesota.

"Sealed" to Her Dead Relatives.

A short time ago a Mormon Saintess went through the Logan Temple and was baptized or sealed to and had adopted into her family thirty dead relatives. It took her three days to perform the various ceremonies and ordinations, and no doubt the defunct will now rise from their tombs, or from their heated dwelling places, and call her blessed. Her husband contemplates going through a similar ceremony and he has taken the trouble to look up his genealogy; he has calculated that it will take him exactly four months' constant daily work to perform all the sacred rites for the various persons that were once members of his family. "The fools are not all dead yet."

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTEEN MILES OF ORGANS.—In numbering the organs of their manufacture, Mason & Hamlin have reached No. 150,000. Arranged in a line these would reach 113 miles, or would form the railroad on one side from the Grand Central Station in New York, to within twenty miles of Springfield, Mass. Not only does this show the great popularity of American organs, but it illustrates what was declared by James Parton to be a general fact that he who makes the best article in his line always has the greatest success.

We understand that the Mason & Hamlin Company's new Upright Piano is now commanding a large sale, and is, in every way, up to the standard of their unrivaled organs. We predict a large success for this piano, which is constructed on a new system, said to be a decided advance over the prevailing wrest-pin system.—Boston Journal.

Nine-tenths of the chronic or lingering diseases of to-day originate in impure blood, liver complaint or biliousness, resulting in scrofula, consumption (which is but scrofula of the lungs), sores, ulcers, skin diseases and kindred affections. How Women Differ From Men.

At least three men on the average jury are bound to disagree with the rest just to show that they've got minds of their own; but there is no disagreement among the women as to the merits of Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription." They are all unanimous in pronouncing it the best remedy in the world for all those chronic diseases, weaknesses and complaints peculiar to their sex. It transforms the pale, haggard, dispirited woman into one of sparkling health, and the ringing laugh again "reigns supreme" in the happy household.

LIFE IS SO LONG.

"But a week is so long!" he said,
With a toss of his curly head,
"One, two, three, four, five, six, seven!—
Seven whole days! Why, in six, you know
(You said it yourself—you told me so)
There's time for God up in heaven
To make all the earth and the seas and skies,
The trees and the birds and the butterflies.
How can I wait for my seeds to grow!"

'But a month is so long!" he said,
With a droop of his boyish head.
"There's time count—one, two, three, four—
Four whole weeks, and three days more;
Thirty-one days, and each will creep
As the shadow crawls over yonder steep;
Thirty-one nights and I shall lie
Watching the stars climb up the sky.
How can I wait till a month is o'er?"

'But a year is so long!" he said,
Uplifting his bright young head.
"All seasons must come and go
Ere one can with footsteps slow—
Autumn and winter, summer and spring;
Oh, for a bridge of gold to fling
Over the ocean deep and wide,
That I might across to the other side,
Where she is waiting—my love, my bride!"

"Ten years may be long!" he said,
Slowly raising his stately head.
"But there is much to win, there is much to lose;
And a man must labor, a man must choose.
And he must be strong to wait!
Ten years may be long, but who would wear
The crown of honor must do and dare.
Not he who lie to toy with fate
Who cannot climb to manhood's high estate."

"A year is not long," he said
Looking his grand white head.
"One, two, three, four, five, six, seven—
Seventy years! As swift their flight
As the arrows cleaving the morning light,
Or ripples upon an even.
Life rest on us a summer night—
How long, oh God, is eternity!"

SECOND THOUGHTS.

"Look, Walter; that young girl's face would make an artist's fortune!"

"By all that's wonderful, if it isn't my cousin May!" said Walter, reining in his horse so suddenly as to throw him on his haunches.

"Well, you gypsy, what are you doing fifty miles from home this morning. Some mischief, I'll warrant."

"Visiting." May answered saucily and contentedly, from her station by the lane gate.

"Visiting whom; some ancient maiden like yourself?"

May was 16 and could afford to "be rallied upon her age. So her blooming cheeks dimpled with a smile as she answered:

"Not so bad as that, Walter. I'm helping Susie Arnold nurse her Uncle—a crusty old bachelor—who can sympathize with your sufferings from the gout."

Walter laughed.

"It still takes some trouble to get the start of you, little coz. Susie Arnold here?, I'll just run in and see if she has a place in her memory for an old friend. Jump on, May, and take a ride. My friend here will be most happy to escort you. By-the-bye, I must introduce you, Philip, this is my cousin May—Mr. Orne, Miss Alleyn. Steady, Gyp; there, May, let me assist you to mount."

"Thank you, Walter; I'm sorry to disappoint you, but I must decline to make my debut without a side saddle."

"Gyp is gentle as a lamb; not the least danger in the world. Fie, May, I thought you were as brave as you are saucy."

By this time the spice of daring in the girl's nature was aroused, so she suffered Walter to assist her to a seat upon Gyp's back, saying:

"Well, I see you wish me to appear ridiculous, so I will gratify you."

She adjusted her dress and assumed an erect, graceful position, which did not tell of an inexperienced equestrienne, and taking the reins in her hand, she turned her arch face toward her cousin's friend.

"Mr. Orne, I challenge you to a trial of speed—that distant oak to be the goal."

She touched Gyp lightly with the whip and started off, her curls flying in the wind. Philip Orne followed closely, but she kept the advantage gained at her sudden start, and reached the tree first.

Philip Orne's exterior was that of a hero of romance, but as yet himself and sentiment were strangers, and he was cold and haughty.

This was the gentleman whose claims to consideration Miss May Alleyn decided to ignore.

She read the pride upon his curved lips, and mysteriously resolved to punish him for it.

May was an enigma to him—a new specimen of the human family. So pretty and ladylike in her looks—so wild and untamed in her actions.

He looked at her much as he would at a velvety-furred kitten—pleased with her beauty but wondering what freak would next amuse him.

"I think Walter has by this time made his call, and will be looking for Gyp's appearance. 'Twould be good enough for him if we didn't come. Tried to break my neck, don't you think so, Mr.— Mr.—"

"Orne, at your service."

"Ah, yes, Orne—a peculiar name, is it not?"

If Philip had a weakness, it was pride in his family name, and his tone was very cold as he said:

"I believe it is peculiar to our family. There is but one head to the Ornes."

"Adam, probably?" the fringed lips dropped demurely as Philip's blue eyes flashed out of their coldness, and touching her horse lightly with her whip she cantered off with a gay—

"Good-by. Tell Walter I'll be back before night," and was away before Philip had time to recover his good humor.

"I wonder is this a fair specimen of young ladies," was Philip's thought as he rode slowly back to where he had left Walter, wondering how he would relish his cousin's jest—when there, by the gate, was the runaway girl, dismounting from her horse, and looking as dignified as though she had not mystified him to the extent of her ability.

"Miss Alleyn, are you a magician? How in the name of wonder did you reach this spot?"

"When Mr. Orne turns priest, I'll maybe choose him for my confessor. Until that time 'guess' must be his oracle."

May was secretly delighted at the success of her ruse, which consisted of a cross-cut home that saved some distance, and taken at full speed had brought her there considerably in advance of her companion.

Just then Walter made his appearance, and after a few parting words the two friends turned their faces homeward, and were soon out of sight.

Philip Orne and Walter Alleyn were together in the latter's room. Philip was reading, and Walter was sending a cloud of smoke from a fragrant Havana as he glanced through his letters.

"Well, I declare! Can I believe my eyes? That little humming-bird to be caged at last?"

Philip looked up inquiringly, and Walter tossed a little perfumed note toward him saying:

"Read that and see what you think of it."

He took the note and read:

"DEAR COZ.: Come and visit us as early as the 10th of the month, and, if possible, bring your friend Mr. Orne with you. A wedding comes off on the 12th, and I want you to officiate as groomsmen. I have two very pleasant young ladies selected to stand as your vis-a-vis. Do not be frightened and stay away, thinking that I may inflict myself upon one of you, as I have a more important part to act. I am in a great hurry, so cannot stop to explain particulars, but will do so when we meet. Good-by. MAY."

"Will you go, Orne? I think it would be a pleasant change from this dusty old city. Say yes, and I'll write May to that effect to-night."

Philip consulted his calendar, and finding that he had no pressing business set down for that time, made up his mind to accept the invitation.

The appointed day arrived, and with it the two gentlemen, who were duly introduced to the young ladies who were to be bridesmaids. As May had said, they were pretty and attractive, and the five formed a pleasant party.

"But May, you have not told us who is to be the happy man. Where is he, and why don't you introduce him?" said Walter, after a time.

The three girls smiled amusedly at each other, and May answered:

"I can't very well introduce him until he arrives in town, and I shall not describe him, as I wish him to make a wonderful impression, and a description would spoil all."

Philip Orne made himself very agreeable. May modified her tendency to mischief, for was she not the hostess, and in duty bound to make every one as happy as possible?

She was more dangerous to Philip's peace of mind in this mood than when in such wild exuberance of spirits—as a sweet strain of some familiar song is more effective when we know that the tenderly modulated voice has capacities of power and passion held in abeyance.

An undercurrent of sadness formed a minor cadence to the harmony of his visit, as he saw more of May, and thoughts that the morrow would see her transplanted from her girlhood's home to that of another.

On the evening of the wedding, the four young people were awaiting the entrance of the two who were to be united for life.

A sudden silence fell upon them as the gentleman came into the room supporting upon his arm the lovely girl, whose floating vail, fastened in its place by orange-blossoms, concealed her blushes.

It was not May. This lady was tall and stately—May was petite and slight. The momentary pause of astonishment that followed was broken by the entrance of May, who introduced them as "My friend, the Rev. Duncan Ware, and my schoolmate, Miss Alice Holmes."

The gentlemen were too well bred to express their surprise, and the girls thoroughly enjoyed their mystification.

After the ceremony was over, and congratulations had been offered to the newly-married couple, Walter seized the first opportunity to question May as to her motive in misleading them.

"Why, what do you mean, cousin Walter?"

May's voice and manner expressed great surprise, but Walter detected lurking dimples at the corners of her mouth.

"You know what I mean very well, you little deceiver. You are as bad as ever. I thought you had made up your mind to behave yourself."

"Will you please explain yourself, Walter? What have I done that you lecture me in this way?"

The brown eyes looked very clear and innocent, and Walter burst out with:

"Didn't you write me that you had a more important part to perform?"

"So that is the trouble. You dear old goose, so I have! Am I not the hostess?"

She made him a courtesy, and walked over to where Mr. Orne was standing.

"I have been wishing to see you, Miss Alleyn, to apologize for my extraordinary mistake in considering you the bride-elect. Your friends must feel very happy that you are not to be monopolized just yet. But how did we make such a mistake?"

"Perhaps Cousin Walter has an idea that a bride plays a more important part than the lady who entertains the guests," said May, innocently.

Philip looked at her keenly. As their eyes met May struggled for a moment to retain her gravity, then the pent-up mischief laughed out of her great, brown eyes and in the curve of her red lips.

"I understand, Miss Alleyn; we have put a wrong construction upon your note, and, of course, you feel so badly about it we ought to beg your pardon upon our bended knees. But, jesting aside, may I tell you how very glad I am that the evening still finds you Miss Alleyn?"

His voice was low, but very earnest, and his open, blue and clear as the sky in June, were very thrilling as they sought an answer in those which drooped before them in sudden shyness.

May hastened to turn the subject:

"I must tell you who the bridal couple are. The lady was a favorite school-friend of mine, and is an orphan who has no home but that which a boarding-house provides. The gentleman is a missionary, and my father is very much interested in the particular locality to which he is going, he proposed to give them a wedding party when he heard of their engagement."

The wedding guests were invited to remain for a week or two at the Alleyn Mansion; and drives and walks about the picturesque neighborhood filled the time very pleasantly.

As Philip saw more of May he became completely charmed by the little maiden.

May's feelings were enigmatical to herself. The beau ideal pictured by her girlish fancy, had borne a very different exterior to that of Philip Orne.

She could not help liking him, and she was secretly vexed with herself for it. He was so fair—so effeminate looking—he must be deficient in manly strength and courage. She would not think of him—a man of that stamp should not win her heart.

Her studied indifference probably added to her charms in Philip's eyes. He had a fancy for overcoming obstacles. In his legal capacity he would often undertake cases for their very difficulty, and he was never so triumphant as when he could make a jury agree upon points which only an acute lawyer could make clear.

One morning the rest of the party had gone to visit some mineral springs at a distance. May had a slight headache, and excused herself from joining the excursionists, and Philip staid at home to write some letters.

After a while the fresh morning air wooed them forth for a ramble, and meeting on their return, they walked along together.

A pretty child was running along the sidewalk under the charge of her nurse.

Philip and May were both fond of children, and they watched the little thing with great interest, admiring the effect of her long golden hair as it floated down over her white dress.

Suddenly they heard a cry which made the blood run cold in their veins.

"Mad dog! mad dog!" and on, on, on, directly toward the little prattler came the long, loping strides, that most fearful of dangers—a huge dog, whose bloodshot eyes and foam-flecked mouth, out of which lolled the red tongue, showed the truth of the alarm.

May's feet seemed frozen to the ground—a horrible helplessness held her there. The panic-stricken nurse left the child and ran inside a garden gate, and closed it after her.

The unconscious little one laughed and put out her hands, evidently thinking that the rabid animal would play with her, as did her pet dog at home.

Philip Orne retained his self-possession, and just at the critical moment when all seemed lost, he caught the creature by the nape of the neck and held him in a powerful grasp. In vain did the maddened animal snap at his captor, and writhe and struggle to escape. The white fingers which May secretly stigmatized as weak and effeminate, seemed made of iron.

A few moments of this horrible uncertainty—then the brute's eyes glazed and he went into a fit. The danger was no longer immediate, and Philip relaxed his hold.

By this time a policeman had arrived on the scene, and with his pistol he soon ended the poor creature's sufferings.

May felt deeply humiliated at her inefficiency in the hour of danger. For all that she had done with her fancied firmness of nerve, that dimpled little form might now have been mangled and torn by those huge fangs in which lurked a poison as deadly and more to be dreaded than that of the rattlesnake.

She caught the child in her arms and almost smothered her with kisses; then she turned to Philip.

"Mr. Orne, I owe you a debt which nothing can repay. If this little darling had been bitten I should have felt all through my life that it was owing to my lack of presence of mind in not snatching her from the threatened danger."

Her overstrung nerves relieved themselves in a burst of tears.

"Don't speak of it—it is best forgotten. Will you take my arm? You are looking very white."

May accepted the proffered arm, and they walked on in silence.

Philip did not underrate the danger he had escaped. He well knew that a false aim in seizing the rabid animal, or the slightest relaxation of his iron muscles, would have exposed him to sufferings compared to which the tortures of the Inquisition were but as shadows. He felt as a man does who has met death face to face.

May was of a frank, open nature, and she felt that she had done this quiet man injustice. She had undervalued him, and she must make confession, or never again feel at ease in his society.

"Mr. Orne," said she, hesitatingly, "will you forgive me? I did not give you credit for such courage. I thought——"

"Say no more, Miss May," Philip answered, as he gazed into her brown, tear-clouded eyes. "It would not be in mortal man to resist so fair a pleader, whatever might be her offense. May I not reverse our present positions, and become the entreating party myself?"

There was a meaning in his quiet tones which thrilled to May's heart, and made it throb tumultuously.

Philip saw her agitation and took her little hand in his warm, firm clasp.

"Miss Alleyn—May—will you prove your contrition by giving me the sole right of this soft little trembler?"

As May listened she knew that Philip Orne would henceforth be to her life as is the sun to the flower, but a strange timidity sealed the lips usually so ready with their gay retort.

Blushing and confused, she strove to withdraw her hand. Her lover's ardent glances enabled the sweet face, with its downcast eyes.

"If you do not answer, I shall think silence means consent."

One swift glance at his face.

"Please, Mr. Orne, my fingers are not made of iron."

He dropped her hand with a pained look.

"I beg your pardon ——"

The rest of his sentence was unuttered, as May was flying up the lawn like a wild thing.

This evasion of a direct answer was a new phase in May's character; but Philip read its meaning correctly. A denial of his suit would have been prompt and decisive. Her girlish timidity caused hope to fold her snowy wings and make her dwelling within his heart.

He did not succeed in seeing May until the morning of his departure; but the previous evening he gave her a bouquet of English violets, with a note written in its fragrant depths, requesting her to wear his offering as a breast-knot if she could respond to his love.

When she appeared at breakfast, the sweet, shy face was suffused with blushes as Philip's eyes rested upon it, for beneath it, breathing forth their precious meaning, reposed his gift.

When Philip returned to his city home he bore with him the hope that, with the coming of the daisies, he might claim his "May-flower," as he loves to call her.

It seems fitting to him that the earth should be dressed in a garniture of bloom upon her wedding-day, who is to him the fairest blossom of them all.

ABANDONING THEIR HOME.

The Natives of Iceland Seeking New Homes in Winnipeg and Manitoba.

A party of Icelandic immigrants, numbering nearly eighty persons, arrived in Winnepeg in the charge of the long expected Icelandic minister, Rev. John Bjarnason. This gentleman organized a congregation of Icelanders and built a church in Winnepeg nearly three years ago. Only a few services were held in the church when the happy and prosperous little congregation had to say farewell to its pastor, he having been unexpectedly called away to Iceland. He promised to return, however, and since that time the Icelanders of Winnipeg have been anxiously looking for the arrival of their beloved minister.

Since he has been in the far North land, Rev. Mr. Bjarnason has lost no opportunity to point out to his countrymen the advantages and resources of Manitoba, and the immigration from Iceland during the last two or three years has been due in a large measure to his efforts.

He left Iceland with his party nearly six weeks ago, going first to England and thence to Boston and to Winnipeg. Two or three families remained in Toronto, intending to settle in Northern Minnesota.

The people in Iceland are very poor; in fact, their poverty as a class, is really surprising. Times have been hard there for years, and the immigrants are delighted to think they have at last reached a country where by honest toil and frugality they will have an opportunity to provide a home for their families. In Iceland they did very little farming, even in the southern part, the land being almost worthless for agricultural purposes. The people engage principally in the raising of horses and cattle, exporting them to England and Scotland. Here they will go into farming, the great majority of them intending to take up land at the Icelandic settlement at Lake Winnipeg, where there are already several hundred thrifty settlers. A few of them having friends at the settlement in Southern Manitoba will take up their residences there, also entering agricultural pursuits.

Mr. Bjarnason has no fears as to their success in this country. They will pick up the language, he says, in the course of a very few months, and will then overcome the many difficulties and disadvantages of speaking a foreign tongue. Icelanders, he says, learn the English language much more quickly than do Swedes or Norwegians; or, in fact, than any immigrants from foreign lands. He can give no reason for this, but it is the fact. They will remain in the city with their friends during the summer, as it would be useless for them to go to their land now. In the fall, however, they will begin life as Manitoba farmers.

The Baneful Cigarettes.

Says the Boston Herald: "Too much cannot be said against cigarette smoking by boys," said a well-known physician, when asked his opinion upon the subject, "and we mean to have more to say about it in the future. The evil is certainly growing rapidly, and is one that we find hard work in combating. Boys have every means of smoking without the knowledge of their parents, and often have their full consent. Cigarettes may be obtained by them at any little variety store, at two or three for a cent. These are sure to be made of the vilest tobacco, or no tobacco at all. Well recognized brands are not much better, and I have good authority for stating that one brand of cigarettes, which is perhaps more extensively smoked than any other, is largely manufactured from clippings from block paper soaked in nicotine. The paper wrappings in the best brands are perhaps not injurious, but in others add another feature to the harmfulness."

"What remedy would you suggest?"

"Let a law be passed prohibiting the sale of tobacco in any form to boys under a certain age. Such a law is in effect in New Jersey, though of course the difficulty is in its proper enforcement. Parents should always keep a sharp eye on their sons. When a boy slinks into the house for his supper, trying to look unconcerned, yet very fishy about the gills, and not eating anything, you may be sure he has been down the back alley wrestling with his first cigarette. Express a gentle regard for his health, take him up-stairs, and then administer—not the slipper, for the boy may have a shingle in his trousers—but a good dose of ipecac, one of castor oil, one of bitter rhubarb, and any other your fancy may suggest. Then call in your physician, let him smile his best, and if that boy is not improved by the attention you tried to give him it will be an abnormal."

CRIMINAL DIRECTORS.

TALMAGE FIERCELY ATTACKS WALL STREET BUSINESS METHODS.

He Eulogizes the Late Secretary Folger, but Denounces the Men who, Under Cover of Religion, Steal Other People's Money.

In his opening prayer Sunday Dr. Talmage asked the Almighty to supply this country with "a radical religion that will eradicate every evil and introduce every good."

His text was from Revelations xviii., part of seventeenth verse: "In one hour so great riches are come to naught."

"The columns of our Custom Houses," said the preacher, "and of the National and State Capitols are swathed in black, and all the flags are at half-mast for the dead Secretary of the Treasury. At the age of 66 he died, without a spot on his reputation, although most of his life was spent among temptations that have flung multitudes into the dust. For three years he held the purse of the nation, but not a half-penny stuck to his hands. In his dying hour he asked his attendant to take a check from the left pocket of his coat and have it cashed immediately, so that he might pay the expenses of his obsequies. After paying his way through life he paid his admission fee at the door of the sepulchre. Square with his fellow-men, square with the Government—square, I hope, with the Ruler of all Governments and of all men.

"What a glorious background this is to the epidemic of fraud that prevails through all the land. This unroofing of banks, this disappearance of administrators with the estates they have been appointed to administer, this disorder in Post Office accounts makes a pestilence of crime, and leads every Christian to ask how it can be stopped. It is a simoon, a typhoon, a sirocco of crime. I have often thought if it wouldn't be better for men making wills to bequeath all to executors and officials of courts, making the widows and orphans a committee to see that the others get all that don't belong to them.

"There are men sailing yachts, driving fast horses, gambling away thousands every night and wallowing in wine who would not have a dollar if they paid what they owed. A man is crushed in business or speculation. After a while he blossoms forth again having compromised with his creditors and paid them up in regrets. I have noticed that nine out of ten failures, so-called, result in making men richer after than they were before the failure and that their published reverse is only a cover under which to introduce some more stupendous fraud.

"I blame Directors of banks for laxity in permitting cashiers and bookkeepers to go on stealing year after year. They are either partners in infamy or else are guilty of negligence, for which God will hold them responsible. Men in high standing allow their names to be used as Directors, and on the strength of their names many people of small means place their hard-earned money in their charge. When the bank goes under, and the small earnings of widows and orphans and of the helpless aged go with them, the Directors stand by with idiotic stare, and when an outraged community assails them, the Directors say: 'I thought it was all right; I didn't know there was anything wrong.' But they ought to know; they are in a position to know. They are advertised as Directors, but they don't direct. All they care to know is what their dividends amount to. They are guilty either of complicity or willful negligence. They allow themselves to be used as decoy ducks to attract an unsuspecting public to ruin. A pressing need is that 5,000 Directors of banking, insurance, mining and railroad corporations shall either resign or attend to their business. Just so long as fraud is so easy in business life there will be plenty of it. When you arrest the President or cashier of a bank you should also provide enough Sheriffs for the same day to arrest all the Directors.

"Some one says, 'Why don't you preach the Gospel and let business alone?' Well, if your Gospel means that crooked business methods shall be condoned, then you had better sink it in the bottom of the sea. An orthodox swindler is far worse than a heterodox swindler. You may subscribe to all the creeds, and take a sup out of all the chalices in Christendom, but that will not help you unless your business life is consistent with the simple rules of honesty and fair dealing. Some of the greatest scoundrels in the world are members of the church. The time ought to pass away forever when men can steal for six days in the week and get fat on sermons about Heaven on the seventh. Either they should be forced to see and follow the straight road to salvation or thundered out of the Christian church.

"Every week brings new revelations of business crime. It's an epidemic. How many more bank Presidents and cashiers are gambling with other people's money, and how many Directors are sitting in imbecile silence letting perfidy progress under their noses, a great and patient God only knows. I think we have nearly touched bottom. The summer passed has been a great one. The wind has been kicked out of the bubble of American speculation. People who thought Judgment Day to be 5,000 years off found it last spring. Others have learned that it is better to keep their hands out of their neighbor's pockets. Great fortunes have been obliterated, and men who had nothing to lose lost all they had.

"On the first Wednesday after the second Tuesday in November, this country will enter an unexampled career of prosperity, if—if—if——"

Here the congregation laughed in anticipation of the preacher's taking up claims of the campaign orators. But he went on to say:

"If business men will stop speculating with other people's money. They have no business to take the property of others and turn it into kites to fly and trap bubbles to blow about. There is one good reason why for all this female vote, ecclesiastical and [illegible] that if [illegible] they will go [illegible] the bank funds he does not purloin; he only borrows. What we want is some man of strong limb to stand at the head of Wall street, and when this term 'borrow' comes along, kick it clean down to the Wall Street Ferry, and over to the Brooklyn Heights or Hill. Never speculate on borrowed money!

"Ninety per cent. of those who speculate in Wall street lose all. The Bible says that 'Faith without works is dead,' which being literally translated means that if your business life does not correspond with your professions your religion is a humbug. Live within your means. I have the highest commercial authority for saying that when the trouble broke out in Wall street last spring, there were $225,000,000 in suspense which had been already expended. Some people think that religion is a delicate thing—an aromatic ambrosia, a sugar-coated peppermint, a sanctified gum drop, a holy caramel. But it is a serious thing. You can't hide your samples of tea, sugar and coffee if they are false, under the cloth of the communion table.

THE FIGHTING AT LIMA.

Caceres' Raid and How it was Met by the Government Troops.

A letter from Lima, Peru, dated August 28, says: Things have at last come to a head. The attack, which was to have been made some weeks ago, on Lima took place yesterday. About four a. m. Caceres and his forces marched upon the city, and the advance guard began to fire upon the government troops who had penetrated beyond the city walls. Surprised at this sudden attack, the government troops fell back. The heads of Caceres' columns now began to enter the city, and by a quarter past five a. m. made a direct attack upon the palace. For over six hours a storm of bullets continued, and some very fierce fighting took place. The rabble mob, which Caceres' followers consisted of, yelled and fired in the greatest disorder, but, notwithstanding their defects, they managed to capture the Cuartel and Espiritu Santo (the principal prison) and the churches of Merced and San Augustin. The fire was probably hotter in the churches than in any other part of the city. The fighting at the San Augustin Church was with closed doors. A terrible fusilade was kept up here, and nearly one hundred and fifty people were killed outside the church doors. Caceres did not take any active part in the affray. During the fight he was seen riding about with some eighty mounted followers, but, from what I can gather, they had been traveling all night, and, consequently, were not in a condition to tackle the government troops, who were well fed and fresh from their beds. The fighting continued all day, and it certainly seemed as if it would continue all night. However, about two p. m., the government troops made a sortie and compelled the revolutionists to fall back.

AFTER THE STRUGGLE.

This morning I have been out in the streets, and they present a fearful sight. Dead bodies are to be seen everywhere. The number of prisoners taken amount to over five hundred, including officers and several monteneros chiefs. The officer commanding the government troops, and who was in charge of the prison when attacked, is in custody. The prison was taken by Caceres, and about twenty political prisoners were liberated. Several persons who were taking no part in the affray were killed. A German, proprietor of a cigar store, one of the favorite lounges in Lima, was shot while looking out of his balcony at the skirmish. Another case was that of a man named Manuel Poita, who was undergoing a sentence of fifteen years' imprisonment for homicide. He was struck by a stray ball and killed. Caceres and his remaining followers retreated to Pisco, whither they were pursued and the town captured.

She Will Send for Him.

A broad-shouldered, compactly-built young woman with brown face and hard hands sat in the Lake Shore depot waiting for the departure of a train for the East. She had just arrived in town from Dakota.

"Marriage?" said she, in reponse to some remark by her companion; "that's what all the good-for-nothing cranks of men that I see from plowing time to harvest can talk about. What do I want to get married for? There are more than 300 of us girl farmers in Dakota, and we will hold a convention some time. I never saw a man yet that I would have around. I intend to farm it until I get enough money to live on comfortably, and then I'll see. There was a nice young fellow in my neighborhood last July, who tried to be very gallant and wanted to help me whenever I did any work. If I chopped a little wood, he wanted to do it. If I went after a pail of water, he wanted to carry it. If I put a bag of grain on my shoulder, he insisted on giving me a lift. He was a pretty nice boy, but he made me tired. One day I wanted the hay-rick on the wagon, and I took hold one end and clapped it up on the wheel so quick that it made him dizzy.

"'Let me,' says he, but he only threw the whole thing down in trying to get the other end up. He didn't have the strength.

"Says I: 'Oh, go away. You don't eat enough No. 2 wheat.' Then I put the rick up in good style.

"We meet lots of such fellows out there. They are good enough, I suppose, but when I want one I will send for him.—Chicago Herald."

THE BEST.—Irish butter seems to be the best. At the International Exposition held this year at Celantia it was awarded a diploma and medal. The samples exhibited had voyaged from Ireland to India, and had withstood several months' exposure to tropical heat. The next in merit was a sample of American oleomargarine, but it was thrown out by the judges on learning its nature.

He was Proud if he was Poor—How to Appreciated it—All in Strict Confidence—A Storm Coming—Why it was Done, Etc., Etc.

AN APPRECIATIVE HUSBAND.

"You know what kind of a man Smith is? Well, he has been very good to Briggs all winter."

"How. Loaned him money?"

"No, not exactly; but when Briggs was away from home he took his pretty wife to the theatre several times."

"Did Briggs appreciate it?"

"Appreciate it? Of course he did. The first time he met Smith after he got home he killed him."—Graphic.

IN STRICT CONFIDENCE.

First Bridesmaid—"You'll never tell?"

Second Bridesmaid—"Of course not. I never do, you know."

First Bridesmaid—"Well, she told me, in strict confidense, understand, that though Jack was poor, they were going to travel all summer and stop at the best hotels, and that they got the money by selling their duplicate wedding presents. I wonder whether my spoons are paying part of the expenses."—Troy Press.

THE HARVEST.

About now is the time when the wily rural editor prepareth to put into type: "We have just received at our office a most beautiful specimen of apple, which measures fully six inches in circumference. Who can beat it?"

Then he maketh ready his sacks and barrels, aye, even his barns and storehouses, for the rich harvest that will accrue to him from the emulous rustics.—Boston Globe.

THE CAREFUL CHAP.

"Do they have spring in Russia now?"

"No, why do you ask?"

"Because the Czar had all the trees cut down along the railroad from St. Petersburg to Warsaw, and in spring the trees shoot."

"No, he is not afraid of the trees shooting."

"Why then, did he have them cut down?"

"I am not sure, but perhaps he was afraid there might be dynamite in these trunks."—Texas Siftings.

HEAVIER THAN DOUGH.

"What is the heaviest thing in the world?" asked young Sharply of Mrs. Badger, his landlady, as he poised a biscuit in his hand.

"I should say it was money."

"Ah?" inquired the young man.

"Yes, because you never seem strong enough to raise sufficient to pay your board when it is due."

Mr. Sharply eats his biscuits now without asking any conundrums.—N. Y. Times.

INDIAN SUMMERS.

Visitor (at the Indian school)—"So all these children are Indians?"

Teacher—"Yes. Many of them are sons and daughters of great chiefs."

Visitor—"What are they doing now?"

Teacher—"This is the arithmetic hour, and they are doing sums."

Visitor—"Ah! Yes, I have often heard of Indian summers."

The silence which followed was only broken by the whizz of tomahawks.

WHY HE DID IT.

"What are you whipping that boy for?" asked a passer-by of an Irishman.

"Because his brother hit me with a stone, sor."

"Well, but this boy is not to blame."

"Yes, but yes see, sor, the two chaps are twins."

"That makes no difference."

"Yes, it does, sor, for bate' so much aloik, it would be the one av them at all to hit me as the other."—Arkansaw Traveller.

CHILTON VIEW.

Published Every Thursday Morning.

CLANTON, ALA., NOV. 27, 1884.

Senator Lamar, of Mississippi—the philosophic statesman, should have a place in Cleveland's cabinet.

A little girl in Montgomery collected nearly thirty dollars in two days for the Orphan's Home at Tuskegee.

The Cincinnati Commercial Gazette is making itself ridiculous by its abuse of the peace-ridden South.

Cleveland's majority of the popular vote was about 100,000. His majority in the electoral college will reach 37.

The Republicans say that it was shameful in Harper's Weekly to picture Blaine in company with Boss Tweed.

Mr. Blaine made a silly speech in which he was very bitter toward the South, at his home, Augusta, Maine, last week. Desperate at defeat.

Mr. Chappell Cory, a most accomplished journalist, has left the Selma Times and is again on the staff of the sterling old Montgomery Advertiser.

The State Legislature on Monday re-elected Hon. James L. Pugh, of Barbour, to the U. S. Senate. This token of appreciation was deserved, and the Legislature is to be commended for its wisdom in this particular.

President-elect Cleveland has given orders to his private Secretary to destroy without showing to him, all applications for office. A sensible order—which is a feather in the cap of our next president. He will be a good one.

The Linden Reporter says:—"Gold in thirty-three counties in this State; copper in thirteen; iron in forty-three; diamonds in twenty-six; whiskey in all of them; and the last gets away with all the rest."

And now Mr. James G. Blaine is to finish writing his book "Twenty Years in Congress." It is to be hoped that he will profit by the example set by Rev. Dr. Burchard and have nothing to say of the great Republican shibboleth of "Rum, Romanism and Rebellion." Mr. Blaine it seems will for a time at least strive to be good rather than to be great.

The Birmingham Chronicle agrees with this and other papers of the State that our present financial condition is such as to render the reduction of the tax rate unsafe. The Chronicle says:

We have grown accustomed to this rate and it is not burdensome. Two years more will probably put the state in a financial condition which will justify the reduction. It is certainly not in that condition now. With scarcely an extra dollar in our vault it would not do to reduce.

If the people had felt that this rate was too burdensome, they would have made it an issue in the campaign, but it was hardly mentioned. If they want the reduction very much, they can make it an issue in the next election.

The Hayneville Examiner expresses the most correct idea of the intellectual and moral calibre of the best element of society in this state of any of its confreres. But if the publishers wish for success in their newspaper enterprise, we advise them to quit telling the truth and to adopt the rule of the great majority of the newspapers of the state, and flatter, and lie about the excellencies of everybody and everything in Alabama. That's the road to success. Our able confrere is not shrewd.—Ashville Ægis.

Perhaps the Ægis is a success as a newspaper enterprise, but we would be afraid to say so after reading its opinion of the successful, as above.

We laugh down here at the idle fear of the southern negro, when he hears, in the rejoicing shout of the white people, his own return to slavery, but when we read in the Chicago Tribune and the Cincinnati Commercial-Gazette, that there is danger that the confederates in congress will pay pensions to the confederate soldiers and pay the confederate debt, we see that negroes are not the only ignorant people in the country. Of course these papers would not publish such ridiculous lies unless they thought they had readers who would believe them. Everybody knows that the white who would believe all these lies

The Legislature.

A week spent in Montgomery among the States' law makers develops the fact that so far the present Legislature has no higher ambition than to butcher the State Code to the greatest extent possible. Two thirds of the bills so far introduced have been bills to repeal or amend section this or section that of the laws enacted by previous legislatures. This causes one to consider that if we had never had a "previous" legislature we would have no need now of the present body. In conversation with the members each one will express the opinion that this introduction of so much unimportant local legislation is a nuisance. The individual legislator knows of but one section of the code which he desires to have amended or repealed. His mind is not troubled in the least with reflections that perhaps a hundred of the others desire the doctoring of a hundred other sections. And so it goes. He introduces his bill; and a hundred others introduce theirs, and the committees are over-run with minor bills which will require fifty weeks rather than the legal limit of fifty days even to read and classify.

As the session is limited by law to fifty days, it is our opinion that the present Legislature had better "buckle down to business" very soon or the people will be after them with sharp sticks when they get through and go home.

The Governor's message was not out of the usual line of documents originating with our soldier-Governor—very profuse in language but rather devoid of information to the average citizen. We had hoped that this Legislature would do better than the last, but this hope has only served to remind us of the negro minstrels quaint phrase: "Dars a good time a comin' boys, but its a good time a comin' boys."

Calliervville Dots.

MR. EDITOR—Perhaps you think that you humble correspondent from this quiet village has become indifferent to the "Chilton View." Believe it not. He has been afflicted—troubled with his eyes.

Notwithstanding the long drouth, an abundant crop of sweet potatoes have been harvested—sugar-cane, too, was better than could have been expected. Some of our citizens have prepared for winter grazing by sowing rye and turnips; but we need rain again for our young plants. What section of country is more blessed with an abundant supply of water, all the time than ours?

The sympathies of our community have been greatly aroused recently. First, Spurgeon and Lester Parnell—bright little boys of six and eight years of age were missing late on Sunday evening—the anxious parents had vainly searched for them. The sad news flew wildly around, and the community at large male and female great and small left unfinished suppers and sallied forth by the light of the moon; but the joyful tidings met us: "The children have been found." The very next sunday little John Adams—a lovely babe of nine months—crawled unobserved to the hearth, caught hold of a boiler of hot water and was scalded, at first, we feared fatally; fortunately, the Dr. was at home. We are glad to add, that he is now fast recovering.

That very Sunday morning, an old negro woman who lived alone on Mr. McGee's place, was found dead just outside her door—had evidently been burned to death on Friday night. She was seen late that evening with a turn of wood—the inference is, from appearance that her clothes caught fire while cooking, she ran out, and rolled over the dewy grass, vainly hoping thus, to extinguish the flames: her flesh had been horridly torn from the bones, by dogs, hogs and buzzards. O! the distress and suffering, which are blended with the gayety and prosperity in this beautiful world of ours. "Such is life" and death; but they end not here.

Our schools are in a flourishing condition, so is our church—we have preaching three times a month now. Revs. Mills and Ruddle occupy the first and third Sabbaths. Rev. Green, the 4th. Mr. Jones' singing class has improved much. They sing well in concert.

Miss Lula King has gone to Mississippi, to assist her grandfather in a high school. She is greatly missed; but Miss Belle Smith has returned, so we still have a young lady to enliven our society. Mr. King has moved to Plantersville with his pleasant family. Mr. Johnson, from Illinois, now occupies the cottage they vacated. Indeed, many good citizens have recently come into this neighborhood—the lumber and coaling businesshaving inducements to those who are seeking employment. Mr. McGee has just sold an acre lot, near Stanton, to a gentleman from Georgia, who says there are several others who desire to emigrate to this enterprising community. They had better hurry within hereafter and purchase homes. Our mercantile men [illegible] because we haven't a good teacher, but to be free from the business and hindrance of home. He visited us last week. His friends were glad to meet him at Sabbath School. Walter Broadhead has "set his mark high."

Stanton Dots.

The coaling company is making arrangements to commence shipping coal about the 26th of this month. They have a contract with the Shelby Iron Company to furnish them with all the coal they manufacture. The coaling business has certainly been a great blessing to this section of country, as it has given employment to quite a number of needy people. The coaling and saw mill companies together give employment to about 300 men.

The Gregory & Coe lumber company have shipped some fine specimens of their products to be added to the E. T. V. & G. R. R. collection at the New Orleans Exposition.

Mr. S. W. Huston, one of Talladega's most successful farmers, is visiting his sister Mrs. J. R. McArthur, of this place. He will also visit relatives at Selma before returning home.

We have a large number of young men in our little village but they seem to consider young ladies a species of dynamiters, for they appear to be afraid of getting within a hundred yards of them.

MORE ANON.

From Strasburg.

Mr. A. J. Garner who has been sick for some time is better.

DIED—on the 20th inst., of consumption, Mrs. Harkey. She was a good neighbor, a kind mother and an affectionate wife. She leaves a bereaved husband, several little children and many friends to mourn her loss.

We welcome Messrs. Boles and Baxley, who are with us once more getting timbers for the rail road.

Miss Carrie Estes, of Verbena, is visiting her brother and family at this place.

Lands that could have been bought three years ago in this community for $2.00 per acre, can't be had for $5.00 now.

Judging from the cotton that is bought here, the goods that we sell and the price of land, Strasburg must be going to do something towards building herself into a lively little village in the near future.

What Makes the Man.

Prof. Huxley.

Many people seem to forget that character grows; that it is not something to put on, ready made, with womanhood or manhood, but, day by day here a little and there a little, grows with the growth and strengthens with the strength, until, good or bad, it becomes almost a coat of mail. Look at a man of business prompt, reliable, conscientious, yet clear-headed and energetic. When do you suppose he developed all these admirable qualities? When he was a boy.

Let us see the way in which a boy of ten years gets up in the morning, works, plays, studies, and we will tell you just what kind of a man he will make. The boy that is late at breakfast, and last at school, stands a poor chance to be a prompt man. The boy who neglects his duties, be they ever so small, and then excuses himself by saying, "I forgot! I didn't think!" will never be a reliable man. And the boy who finds pleasure in the suffering of weaker things, will never be a noble, generous kind man—a gentleman.

Maplesville Dots.

Mrs. M. A. Berry returned to Orrville last Monday.

Mr. Billy Walker attended the Marion fair.

Sheriff Smitherman, we notice, finds work in this locality.

Miss Ursula DuBose is visiting near Orrville.

Mr. Walter Lawrence is shipping wood to Selma.

Farmers are through gathering, and seem to have forgotten that there is fencing to be done and compost heaps to be looked after and replenished. Work all the year round.

N.

The bill of Mr. Foster, recently introduced in the State Legislature, is to prohibit public drunkenness, and makes it a misdemeanor with a fine not exceeding $100. Such a law would be a good one, and would be a source of protection against drunkards to people who do not live in incorporated towns.

LOCAL DOTTINGS.

Prof. Seals and wife, of Birmingham, visited friends at Lomax the past week.

Clanton justly claims to be one of the best cotton markets in the pine hill section.

Clanton is steadily growing, and it grows without ceasing. Some improvement going on all the time.

Our correspondent "Unus," at Jemison, should let us hear from him often. He is a good correspondent.

John McKenzie, of Dixie neighborhood, was arrested last week by the Sheriff on the charge of assault with a weapon. He was released on bail.

A new roller and better ink helps the appearance of our paper. We shall always strive to give our readers a paper neatly and clearly printed.

State Treasurer Smith places us under obligations for a copy of his report of the condition of the Treasury for the fiscal year ending 30th September, 1884.

Jim Taylor and another darkey were among the "catches" that have been added to the county boarding house force by Sheriff Smitherman during the past week.

The Sharp place in Clanton has been purchased by Mr. Ponder, of Georgia, who has moved here with his family and will farm. Mr. P. will make us a valuable and useful citizen, and we are always glad to welcome such.

We regret very much to learn that our young friend, S. Kinlev Williamson, of Verbena, will shortly move to Columbia, S. C. He is an energetic and thorough-going young business man, and we wish him success in his new home.

This is one of the best sections for market gardens and truck farms to be found any where. One of the best gardens on the L. & N. road last season, north of Mobile, was situated only two miles from Clanton.

A lot of valuable property will be sold by Register Stewart before the Court House door in Clanton the first Monday in December. It is to be sold to the highest bidder, in accordance with decrees rendered at the last term of the chancery court. A good opportunity for a safe investment will be presented.

Smith & Montgomery, at Birmingham, are the leading book sellers and stationers. Their stock of school books and miscellaneous books is large and complete. They carry every thing in the stationery line comprising blank books, inks, &c., and make a specialty of fine photograph and autograph albums. They solicit correspondence. Orders will be promptly filled at lower figures than any other book store in Alabama. When you go to Birmingham, be sure to call and see them. oct-23-tf.

From the State Treasurer's report for the past year we note that the following are the maimed and disabled Confederate soldiers living in Chilton county who have received $17.96 each, as pro rata of the $15,000 legislative appropriation for their benefit: James Edwards, Wm. A. Hayden, J. B. Bowdoe, R. Maners, W. W. Gragg, G. W. Armstrong, James W. Cook, H. M. Barrow, J. W. Dennis, J. G. Walker, S. B. McCary, B. H. McCary, H. W. Athey, T. S. Davenport, A. C. Ward, J. M. Davenport, S. S. Phillips, W. P. Jones.

Miss Mollie Hannon visited friends in Montgomery this week.

Now that you are selling your cotton come in and pay for your county paper.

Mrs. W. H. Foshee is visiting relatives in Arkansas. We wish her a pleasant visit.

Mr. C. R. Hannon has been in attendance upon the U. S. Circuit Court, at Montgomery, as a juror.

Mrs. A. M. Adams and family have returned to Clanton after a month's sojourn among relatives at Florence, Ala.

Rev. J. L. Thompson has accepted the call of the Clanton Baptist Church, and will for the next year fill that pulpit the fourth Sunday in each month.

The Sharp place, recently sold to Mr. Ponder, brought $2.500 cash. Which is enough to show that real estate is bringing fair prices in this neigh borhood.

Dr. W. E. Stewart has begun the work of improving his lot by building a residence thereon. The building "boom" struck us in a dull year, but marches bravely on.

Cotton brings 9¼ to 9½ cents in Clanton. Fifty cotton wagons here one day last week, and trade consequently lively. Clanton is booming—"and don't you forget it."

Now that Cleveland is elected we should all go to work and build up right here at Clanton a thrifty interior town. There is no reason in the world why it can not be done.

Dr. J. B. Hardy, of Dixie, was arrested last week by Sheriff Smitherman on two different charges--abusive language and assault with a weapon. He made bond and was released.

The Savannah (Ga.) News truly remarks: "With the custom houses and post offices out of the hands of the Republicans a good many States now put in the doubtful list would be easily and safely Democratic. When the power of the Republican party is once broken it can never be recovered."

The Enterprise Meat Chopper has been tested and endorsed by over one hundred Agricultural Journals. The Farm & Fireside says: "After testing, each Editor immediately ordered an Enterprise Meat Chopper for his family use." The American Agriculturist says: These Choppers excell anything of the kind made in either hemisphere. See large advertisement in another column.

The Fire Fiend.

On Tuesday night last the residence of Mr. T. M. Ternan situated two miles east of Clanton, was totally destroyed by fire. The household furniture was saved. Not long since Mr. Ternan was so unfortunate as to loose his saw mill property by fire. Two such misfortunes within one year would be a serious burden upon any one, and Mr. T. has the sympathies of our community.

No Wonder.

A MAN WHO SUFFERED MENTAL AND PHYSICAL AGONY EIGHT YEARS PROCLAIMS HIS HAPPINESS.

Mental agony is dreadful, but when that and physical ailment combine, it is simply terrible. Such was the condition of Geo. W. Frampton, of Huntingdon, W. Va., for eight years. He was a sufferer of necroses—that is, the leg bone at the ankle was inflamed and mortified, which caused running sores. He says: "Pieces of bone the size of a silver three cent piece came out of the sores on my leg. The discharge from the sores was almost continual, and I was unable to walk. For eight years I have been doctoring. I had been under the treatment of a physician at Newport, Ky., for a year; another at Burlington, O., attended me for three years, and a doctor here at Huntingdon worked with me for a long time. None of them did me any good, and they all finally said my case was hopeless. A few months ago I commenced trying PERUNA, and now I am well. I can walk as good as anybody, and have perfect use of my limbs."

Mr. Alf. Lusk, Wooster, Ohio, writes: "DR. HARTMAN, Columbus, O. I have been a great sufferer from that dreaded disease, chronic catarrh of the stomach. I have thoroughly tried your MANALIN, and it has done me more good ten-fold than all the doctors' prescriptions, and I have used legions of them."

Mr. Edgar Harte, Smeltzer P. O., Elk county, Pa., writes: "I have bought several bottles of your PERUNA, and find it to be of great benefit. I also gave it to some of my friends; they experienced the same result."

Mr. L. R. Wollen, 45 and 47 Ross street, Pittsburgh, Pa., writes: "I am taking PERUNA with good results, and can highly recommend it to all. I have applied at the different drug stores for one of your books. They claim they have none on hand at present. Please do me the favor to send me one."

W. W. Russell, druggist, Canonsburg, Pa., writes: I handle your medicine, PERUNA. I have sold immense quantities of it, and consider it a staple article. I have a great many customers who think there is no medicine like it for a tonic or for building up the system. I recommend it as a safe and reliable remedy."

Calista Fishel, Malvern, Ohio, writes: I take pleasure in recommending the use of PERUNA and MANALIN to any one afflicted with any form of lung or bronchial trouble. I have been for some time afflicted with a very troublesome cough, but a few bottles of PERUNA entirely cured me."

FUTURE OF THE HOG TRADE

WILL GERMANY AND FRANCE BE ABLE TO DOMINATE IN THE MARKETS?

A Prominent Exporter Tells How the Prohibition of American Pork from Germany and French Markets Has Improved American Trade—Decline of Exports to Great Britain.

[From the New York World.]

The hog is striking a big figure in the history of our time. He has become the subject of grave diplomatic dispatches. Bismarck has set him up as the object of great national policy. A learned commission appointed by the President is investigating him. He was the cause of Minister Sargent's withdrawal from Berlin, and now that the new Minister Kasson has just made his official bow to Kaiser William a cable dispatch announces that he is received kindly in Germany, as he "is solid on the pork question."

Bismarck's policy is playing the havoc with the provision markets in this country. A prominent exporter said Saturday: "Bismarck has confirmed his reputation for a long head by his action in regard to American pork products. His policy has already, from a German point of view, been crowned with success. Under the pretext that American pork and bacon contained trichinæ—and it was entirely a pretext, as there is not a particle of proof of the unsoundness of our meats—Bismarck instituted a policy of protection to domestic packers by prohibiting the importations of American pork products. The result has more than realized his expectations. Two years ago hog-raising in Germany was a matter of small account. The domestic product was insufficient to meet the home demand, and vast amounts were imported from the United States. Since the prohibition of American pork meats was established, there has been an increase in hog-raising. Not only is the home demand supplied but exportations has begun and Germany is becoming a competitor of the United States in the markets of the world. This is true to a less degree of France also since she began to shut out American meats. It is estimated that over 30,000 hogs are now killed daily on the Continent. The German hogs are not corn-fed, as ours are, but are fattened on potatoes.

"This matter is assuming a very grave aspect for American packers. It is the problem that now confronts the lard and provision trade, for lard, though not included in the prohibition, is nevertheless seriously affected by the edict. Just glance at the returns of the British Board of Trade. During the seven months ending July 31, 1884, the imports of pork meats into the United Kingdom from the United States amounted to 1,632,697 hundredweight, or 268,418 hundredweight less than for the corresponding period in 1883, and from other countries 557,761 hundredweight, or 202,845 hundredweight more than in the corresponding period in 1883. That is to say the United States has fallen off in per cent, and Germany and France have forged ahead 57 per cent. in the first seven months of this year in the great market of Great Britain.

"What does this mean? Does it mean that competition is crowding us out of the free markets of the world as prohibition has drove us out of the others? And what is to be the effect on American markets? Most disastrous, I should say, if this thing continues. This state of affairs leads to the question, whether in the event of our losing our export trade, the home demand would be equal to the consumption of the entire supply. It must be remembered that our production is rapidly increasing. On Jan. 1, there were 45,000,000 hogs in the country, about 5,000,000 more than at any previous time. I don't know what the estimates are for the next packing season, which begins on Nov. 1, but there is a prospect of a large production. The estimate for the corn crop is 2,000,000,000 bushels, which is larger than any previous yield, and in this I find the most hopeful feature for the pork trade. With corn plenty and cheap there can be no excuse for high prices for hogs. We can raise hogs cheaper than any other country. There can be no doubt that we are largely at fault for our seclusion from the foreign markets. Speculation, corners and cliques pushing the prices above their normal standard and often deliberating the quality of the product have been the bane of the trade. The irresistible forces of circumstances has at last produced a state of affairs which must, in my opinion, lead to low prices, and in this way we will attract a larger foreign demand. As for the German decree of prohibition, there is, of course, no remedy for that except from Germany itself. We have largely to thank ourselves for that decree. Bismarck has merely turned our own guns against us."

Points on Insomnia.

Knowing the liability of public speakers to insomnia, I asked the most excitable of this class (John B. Gough) how he obtained sleep after one of his thrilling lectures, generally two hours in length. He replied: "On returning to my room I begin reading some interesting book and in this manner fill my mind with other thoughts, and then I can sleep." Public speakers find it very difficult to stop thinking after they have stopped speaking. Old Lyman Beecher father of the Brooklyn orator, had a load of sand in his cellar, and after evening prayer he shoveled it from one side to the other, and by this exercise toned down the fever of the brain, often finishing by playing the violin, which was one of his accomplishments. Bodily exercise is certainly very efficacious under such circumstances. Persistent insomnia is one of the first signs of insanity and hence should at once call for treatment. As men advance in life naps in the daytime become very useful. I know one brain-worker who takes two or three and also sleeps well at night. If New York could have a "nooning" and our business men could recruit their jaded nerves, by "kind nature's sweet restorer," there would be less drinking, but as they have no time for this they keep themselves up by the bottle and then often lay awake at night from the excitement occasioned by intoxication. Sleep being our great necessity, I offer these suggestions to such of our readers as may find them of service. As a general rule, people should sleep all they can. The most noted victim of insomnia was Horace Greeley, whose intense mental labors and anxiety during that fatal Presidential canvass led through loss of sleep to insanity, and then came a premature collapse of an overworked system which soon found relief in death.

CANNIBALISM IN ARCTIC SEAS.

Belief that It was Practiced by Franklin's Men.

In a letter to the editor of the London Standard, Dr. J. Rae says: In a leader in the Standard of the 18th inst. on the horrible disclosures regarding the recent Greely expedition, the writer expresses a hope and belief that these charges may be found as baseless as similar ones made regarding the unfortunate Franklin expedition. It is not my wish to rake up a very sad story, but I would (being a party concerned) take it as a great kindness if the writer of your leader, or anyone else, could inform me what proofs there were that the story about cannibalism among some of the Franklin party was "baseless." I read carefully everything written on this subject, from Dickens downward, and found little to justify your statement. True, there was a quantity of scurrilous abuse of a people of whom the writers knew nothing, the Esquimaux, whom the great and honest and distinguished man Parry called after two years' experience the most honest and truthful people he had ever met, agreeing in this with my own experience, comparing most favorably with the lying, deceit, and dishonesty spread broadcast among all classes in civilized life, very, very few of whom I could trust as I would the so-called savage Esquimau. Had you, sir, or any other honest and intelligent man heard, as I did, the story of my friends, the Esquimaux, about the dead of the Franklin expedition, communicated through my very efficient interpreter, the conviction would have been forced upon you that they spoke the truth. Even my man, John Beads, left in charge at winter quarters, was informed by natives who had visited him during my absence by signs (Beads knew not the Esquiman language) of what had taken place.

Your leader says that discipline would have prevented men having recourse to cannibalism. I do not believe that any discipline would eradicate the cravings of nature, and it is all very well for those who probably have never been 24 hours continuously without food in their lives to enlarge most indignantly on the subject. Had they been for days, as I have, living, or, rather, existing, on the smallest scraps of skin and bones, and enjoying the most disgusting-looking food as if it had been the greatest delicacy, had they but witnessed the sufferings and cravings of some of my fine fellows during these times of privation, they would have had some knowledge of what starvation meant. Thank God! I myself was in a great measure free from very painful sensations of hunger, and could shoot as coolly at any game that came in the way as when I was on full allowance. * * * I feel bound to tell all I heard, however unpleasant and unacceptable it might be. A distinguished naval officer who followed up and found correct in almost every particular the information I obtained, even to the saddest part, was more politic—or more mean. Schwatka, the American, years afterward heard the same story that had been told to me, in almost the same words. A well-known admiral once said of me that "Rae would tell the truth, even to his injury." This to the admiral referred to seemed something unusual, although it appears to me very simple and natural. In the case of the Franklin party's cannibalism, it was certainly the simplest and best thing that could be done, because the story would have surely come to light through my men, who knew as much as I did by conversing with the interpreter, and the very person who attacked me for telling the story would have been equally ready, and had a far better reason to be down upon me for withholding facts. I repeat that cannibalism took place as surely among some of the Greely party as it did among some of Franklin's people, and it took place among the latter as surely as that I am sitting writing this communication at this present time.

THE MAN IN THE MOON.

Some Curious Notions—The Theory Advanced by the Esquimaux of Labrador.

By the Hurons the moon is called the creator of the earth and the grandmother of the sun; in the myths of the Ottawas it is an old woman with a pleasant white face—the sister of the day star. The Caiquitos call the moon their mother, and the Navajos make it a rider on a mule. Where the planets are worshiped, preference in honors is generally accorded to the brighter and more conspicuous star of the day. But the Botucudos of Brazil give the higher place to the moon and derive most of the phenomena of nature from it; and in Central America and Hayti are also people who hold the moon in no less honor. Curiously, these people find their counterparts among tribes of Western, Southern and Central Africa, who rejoice with dancing and feasts at each appearance of a full moon, and expect an improvement of their condition from its beneficent influence; and they are not so far removed from the superstitious women of civilized Europe and America, who wait for the increase of the moon to change their dwelling, to cut their hair, to be married, and to baptize their children. A belief existed among the ancient Mexicans and Peruvians, the Natchez of the Mississippi, and the Appalachians of Florida, that the sun was the radiant abode of dead chiefs and braves. To the Esquimaux of Labrador belong the honor of having discovered that the moon was the paradise of the good, while the wicked were consigned to a hole in the earth; although some of the South American Indians and the Polynesians of Tokesian may be nearly abreast of them in the competition.—The Popular Science Monthly.

Canadian Annexation.

Lord Lorne in his Canadian pictures says: "I have often been asked as to whether the feeling of Canada in regard to its connection with the empire remains as strong as before. I believe it to be even stronger than it was formerly, and the best test that this is the case is seen in the fact that no public man or public body ever ventured to formulate in recent years with any success a contrary policy. I have often been asked, too, if I believe that the feeling of the United States with regard to the incorporation of Canada is not as strong as before, and in reply to this I would say that it is an undoubted fact that the United States would gladly welcome Canada into their empire, but the Canadians show as yet no sign that they desire this consummation. And, except under very great provocation, it would not be pressed by the public men of the United States. Their idea is that the pear, when ripe, will drop into their lap; but, meantime, the pear is repeating, with a newborn to new figures each time in our old locality, and by use in a more ripe and palatable. ST. CRISPIN AT HOME.

THE MASSACHUSETTS SHOEMAKERS OF THE OLDEN TIME.

How they Compare with the Machine Shoemakers of the Present Day.

A letter from Randolph, Mass., says: The attention of the stranger in this old town is often attracted by small, one-story buildings, 15x20 feet, attached to many of the cottages of the mechanics. Although too substantially built for woodsheds and outbuildings, they are now used as such. They belong to an interesting era in the history of the manufacture of boots and shoes in eastern Massachusetts, before the advent of machinery revolutionized the business, and before the bringing of it into huge steam factories left the little shops of former days to do inglorious duty as henhouses or rubbish bins.

Step back over the pathway of time thirty years and pay a visit to one of these shops. Say that it is a cold, frosty night in the fall, for the men worked in the evening when the weather was cold. The ruddy light gleams cheerfully through the tattered curtains, and we hear sounds of laughter and the click of hammers as we draw near. On entering we find ten or twelve workmen seated on benches crowded into a little room, briskly working by the light of lamps suspended from the ceiling. The walls and ceiling are black from the smoke of years, and the inky efforts of artistically disposed loungers. The floor is buried in a layer of leather chips a foot deep. From the midst of all a little red-hot cylinder stove sends up its rickety pipe along the ceiling to the chimney at the end. A board placed upon a shop tub serves as a seat for a neighbor who has dropped in to hear the news or to participate in the arguments which in many shops is the feature of the evening. Perhaps, if we look close, we may see on a convenient shelf a dictionary or a few works of reference, which are often consulted to substantiate an assertion or settle a dispute, for in those days, before machinery came with its rattle and roar, conversation was easily carried on, and habits of discussion naturally formed, so that practically each "gang" was a debating society on a small scale. Thus it was that in these shops of the olden time was nurtured that spirit of intelligence for which the shoemakers of Massachusetts are noted to-day.

In those days it was not necessary for men to work too hard. They had more time for self-improvement, and they were one of the most intelligent bodies of mechanics in the country. From their ranks sprang such men as Henry Wilson, of Natick, William Lloyd Garrison, who learned the trade in Lynn, and Benj. W. Harris, who worked in Bridgewater and was not noted for superior workmanship. One day Mr. Harris arose from his bench in a moment of temper, and, seizing a hammer, nailed the half-finished shoe on which he was working to the wall, and, leaving the shop, remarked that he was done with shoemaking forever. He never came back. I might mention many others who have made their mark upon the history of the country, though they began life with the peg hammer and awl.

Now for a look at the present mode of manufacturing boots and shoes. The little one-story buildings have been replaced by huge structures four and five stories high. Instead of each man making his own "case" throughout, he has one certain part assigned to him, and does nothing else. On the lower floor of the building is the sole leather room. Here the leather is received in rolls of two or three hundred pounds. This, after being soaked in water until soft, is run through machines by which it is cut into strips, skived, rolled, and died out into soles, inner soles, and taps, the smaller pieces cut into lifts for heels. This is the most dangerous room in the factory for the workmen because of so much knived machinery. It is a rare thing to find such a room that does not contain one or more employees minus a finger or thumb. Sometimes frightful accidents occur. The racer, a huge machine modelled something after the guillotine of France, is used in cutting the sides of leather into strips. It contains a knife four feet long that would cut a man's arm off as easy as scissors cuts a thread.

In the cutting room we find long rows of men at work at high benches cutting calf, kip, split, and other kinds of leather into various patterns for vamps. This is very particular work, and cannot be done by machinery. From the cutting room the leather is brought to the stitching department, where at long rows of sewing machines men and women are putting the vamps together and preparing them for the bottomer.

The bottoming room, which we next visit, is the largest in the factory. Here the "stock" from the sole leather room and the vamps from the stitching room come together and are made up into boots and shoes. Around the sides benches are arranged at which the lasters work, while in the centre are the machines. The lasting of boots and shoes by machinery has not yet been accomplished in a satisfactory manner, and, owing to the nature of the work, probably never will be. By the laster the work is made ready for the fitter, who tacks on the soles. By the use of the fitting machine one man does the work of twenty under the old method. The shoes are now ready to be pegged. The pegging machine was one of the first labor-saving inventions introduced into the business, and has probably done more to break up the old system of manufacture than any other. It does the work of twenty or twenty-five men, the work is done better, and the machine occupies no more room than two edger. The edging machine, like most of the heel and shoe machinery, does the work of twenty men, though it occupies only the space of two.

The work is now transferred to the heeling department. The heeling of shoes by machinery is one of the most interesting operations to be seen in the factory. The heels come from the sole leather room all prepared for the machine, and are fed in one at a time. The shoe is placed in position, the nails [illegible] men. The lasts are next drawn out, and the work is taken in hand by the driver, the heel shaved, and the shoe released, all in four seconds. With this machine some operators can heel 1,000 pairs of shoes per day.

The shoes are now made and ready to be finished. In the finishing room the bottoms are scoured and brushed and the heels scoured and burnished by steam power, and the work is done better than by hand, with a saving of 50 to 75 per cent. of labor. "Destiny" to Her Dead Relations.

A short time ago a Mormon Gentile went through the Logan Temple and was baptized or sealed to and had adopted into her family thirty dead relatives. It took her three days to perform the various ceremonies and ordinations, and no doubt the defunct will now rise from their tombs, or from their heated dwelling places, and call her blessed. Her husband contemplates going through a similar ceremony and he has taken the trouble to look up his genealogy; he has calculated that it will take him exactly four months' constant daily work to perform all the sacred rites for the various persons that were once members of his family. "The fools are not all dead yet."

One Hundred and Thirteen Miles of Organs.—In numbering the organs of their manufacture, Mason & Hamlin have reached No. 150,000. Arranged in a line these would reach 113 miles, or would fence the railroad on one side from the Grand Central Station in New York, to within twenty miles of Springfield, Mass. Not only does this show the great popularity of American organs, but it illustrates what was declared by James Parton to be a general fact that he who makes the best article in his line always has the greatest success.

We understand that the Mason & Hamlin Company's new Upright Piano is now commanding a large sale, and is, in every way, up to the standard of their unrivaled organs. We predict a large success for this piano, which is constructed on a new system, said to be a decided advance over the prevailing wrest-pin system.—Boston Journal.

Human Calves.

An exchange says: "Nine-tenths of the unhappy marriages result from human calves being allowed to run at large in society pastures." Nine-tenths of the chronic or lingering diseases of to-day originate in impure blood, liver complaint or biliousness, resulting in scrofula, consumption (which is but scrofula of the lungs), sores, ulcers, skin diseases and kindred affections. Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" cures all these. Of druggists.

How Women Differ From Men.

At least three men on the average jury are bound to disagree with the rest just to show that they've got minds of their own; but there is no disagreement among the women as to the merits of Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription." They are all unanimous in pronouncing it the best remedy in the world for all those chronic diseases, weaknesses and complaints peculiar to their sex. It transforms the pale, haggard, dispirited woman into one of sparkling health, and the ringing laugh again "reigns supreme" in the happy household.

THE BLUE AND THE GRAY.

BY FRANCIS M. FINCH, NOW JUDGE OF THE COURT OF APPEALS OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

By the flow of the inland river,
Whence the fleets of iron have fled,
Where the blades of the grave-grass quiver
Asleep on the ranks of the dead:
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day!
Under the one, the Blue,
Under the other, the Gray.

These in the rubbing glory,
Those in the glor defeat,
All with the battle-b. A story,
In the dusk of eternity meet:
Under the sun and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day
Under the laurel, the Blue,
Under the willow, the Gra

From the silence of sorrowful hours,
The desolate mourners go,
Lovingly laden with flowers;
Alike for the friend and the foe:
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day;
Under the roses, the Blue,
Under the lilies, the Gray.

So, with an equal splendor,
The morning sun-rays fall,
With a touch impartially tender,
On the blossoms blooming for all:
Under the sod and the dew;
Waiting the judgment day;
Broidered with gold, the Blue,
Mellowed with gold, the Gray.

So, when the Summer calleth,
On forest and field of grain,
With an equal murmur falleth
The cooling drip of the rain:
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day;
Wet with the rain, the Blue,
Wet with the rain, the Gray

Sadly, but not with upbraiding,
The generous deed was done;
In the storm of the years that are fading,
No braver battle was won:
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day;
Under the blossoms, the Blue,
Under the garlands, the Gray.

No more shall the war-cry sever,
Or the winding rivers be red;
They banish our anger forever
When they laurel the graves of our dead
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day;
Love and tears for the Blue,
Tears and love for the Gray

The Mute.

A STRANGE STORY.

"Bah! the peasants!" exclaimed Charles. "Have nothing to do with them. During the war they treated the Prussians better than they treated us. The sharpshooters hated them worse than they hated the plague.

"You are wrong, my good fellow," said Pierre Nerot, who was leaning against the mantel.

"Ah! you know better than I?" asked Charles.

"Yes. An occasion arose recently which proved to me that during the 'terrible year' true French hearts throbbed under the blouse as well as under the uniform."

There were eight or ten members of the circle grouped about Pierre Nerot.

"A story!" they all cried.

"Last summer," said Nerot, "I was with an old college friend, Dubreuil, who had established himself as a physician at his home in a little place in the Vosges. We had risen from the table one day and were about to go for a walk in the neighboring wood. Dubreuil had lighted his pipe and I my cigar, and we were already on the steps when the sound of footsteps made us turn our heads. 'There is the postman,' said my companion. 'Wait for me a second. I have a letter to give him. I left it up stairs on my bureau.' Saying this he re-entered the house.

"I looked at the new comer. He was a young man of twenty-six or twenty-seven years, apparently of a pleasant yet energetic disposition, with an open countenance and a bright glance. When he saw me he inclined his head slightly in salutation. 'Ah,' I said to myself, 'this is not a garrulous person. He does not even say good-day.' Then addressing him, I said:—

"'It is hard work, is it not, running about in such warm weather?'

"He nodded his head in assent. Ah, I thought, he does not know how to speak. The young man read my surprise in my looks. He smiled, somewhat sadly, and then, putting two fingers to his lips, he shook his head. This time I understood.

"'You are dumb, my poor fellow?' I said.

"At this moment Dubreuil returned with his letter in his hand. He had heard my question.

"'Yes,' he said, 'he is dumb, poor Jean Barrot. But that does not prevent him from performing his duties well, since he can read and write and can hear all that is said to him.'

"'Then he was not born dumb, as he is not deaf?'

"'No, he was not born dumb.'

"'Did he become so by accident?'

"'Accident is, perhaps, not the right word. Is it, Jean?

"The young man smiled in an embarrassed manner. He extended his hand for the letter which Dubreuil held. The latter laughed.

"'Ah, my boy, that annoys you. You know I am going to tell your story, and you do not wish to remain to hear it. My word, I will not detain you. I will tell it till you have gone.'

Dubreuil, giving him the letter, pressed his hand warmly.

"The young man saluted us, turned his back and departed with long strides. Then Dubreuil took my arm and told me the following story, as he led me toward the wood whose verdure seemed to slumber in the white light of the August sun.

"Jean Barrot, he informed me, was fifteen years old a little before the outbreak of the war. His father, already old, lived with his two sons in an old house in the corner of the field. Jean was the younger of the brothers, Louis being ten years his senior. Jean being too young to fight remained at home. Louis departed with his regiment. He fought well in two or three engagements. But he also rendered other services. Knowing the country well, he asked the perilous privilege of bearing dispatches across the German lines that separated the army of Metz from the rest of France. Three times already had he accomplished that dangerous journey, and old Barrot, whom his son had, without doubt, visited some dark night, was unable to hold his tongue, and told of Louis's exploits everywhere, so that the Prussians, who held that part of the country for several months, quietly kept watch of the hut, believing that some day they would make a good capture.

"And it happened just as they had foreseen. One evening when Louis had arrived and was talking with his father in a corner of the kitchen without a light, heavy footsteps were heard outside, and the door was suddenly battered with the butt ends of muskets. It was too dark for the father and son to see each's pale face, but they joined hands in the darkness and clasped each other in a convulsive embrace. The house was surrounded; they were lost.

"Presently, Louis called his brother in a low voice.

"'Jean,' he said, 'come here. Try to get away and conceal that in the field.'

"He tore away a package of papers that was sewed to the inside of his shirt over his breast and handed it to the boy. The latter took the package, opened a door and disappeared.

"At the same moment the door at which the men were battering gave way, and seven or eight Prussian soldiers entered with revolvers in their hands. The explanation that followed was short. They seized the two men by the shoulders. The spy and the father who had harbored him were there. They would be shot the next morning. In the meantime, not to lose a moment, they searched the young man, taking off his blouse and his shirt. They found nothing.

"'The dispatches that you brought, where are they?' demanded the leader of the soldiers.

"'The dispatches?' replied Louis Barrot. 'I have none.'

"'What then was there a moment since?' said the officer, pointing to a strip of ripped cloth which had formed part of a pocket and from which the threads still hung.

"'You think that I carried papers there?'

"'I am certain of it. You must have had them there a moment ago.'

"'Well, then, since they are no longer there look for them.'

"'Search everywhere!' cried the officer to his men.

"The soldiers obeyed, opening every drawer, overturning the furniture and examining the ashes on the hearth. They found nothing. Presently two soldiers appeared on the threshold of the door with little Jean. They had been left on guard without, and had just seen him as he was crawling behind a hedge. They pushed him before them into the circle of flickering light cast by the fuming lamp. The boy concealed his hands behind his back.

"'What is that you are hiding there?' said the officer to him in a rough voice.

"'Nothing.'

"'Show your hands, then.'

"The boy exposed his hands. They were covered with dirt.

"'Ah, you little rascal,' exclaimed the officer, 'it was you who concealed the papers? Where are they?'

"The boy remained silent

"'Listen,' said the German. 'There is your father, is he not? and there is your brother?'

"Little Jean twice nodded his head.

"'Very well. If you do not tell where the papers are they will both be shot. If you tell—they shall live.'

"The boy turned his eyes toward his father.

"'Jean,' said the old man, 'listen well to what I say. Even though we die in your sight, do not speak.'

"The boy replied, 'Very well.'

"'To-morrow, then,' said the officer, with an angry gesture.

"The next morning at dawn, in the square before the Mayor's office in the neighboring village, old Barrot and his son Louis stood erect, with uncovered heads, immovable and pale. Twenty steps from them stood the firing party, with their arms at rest. All about, kept back by a cordon of soldiers, were women and old men, who craned their necks in their efforts to catch a glimpse of the prisoners, murmuring prayers, their lips trembling and their eyes full of tears. [illegible]

"Half an hour before the officer had led him into a room in the mayoralty, where his father and his brother were guarded, and ordered that they should be left by themselves. What did he hope from this interview? That the two men would melt before the tears of the lad? The boy wept certainly, for his eyes were red. But what had his father said? When little Jean came out the officer asked:—

"'Do you wish to speak now?'

"'Little Jean replied that he did not. Then his father and his brother would be taken from him. They would be placed together against the wall before his eyes. Even now they were there before him awaiting death.

"There was a moment of horrible suspense. At last the officer gave a command in German and the soldiers levelled their muskets. The officer turned to the boy.

"'Do you wish to speak?' he said.

"The boy's lips did not move; but his form trembled, an expression of frightful anguish passed over his countenance and he uttered a half-stifled cry. Then he tottered.

"The officer approached him, listening for the confession which he thought would fall from his contracted lips. It was not a confession that issued from his lips, but a flow of blood.

"The officer sprang back. On his uniform, on the breast just over his heart, was seen a red stain, while at his feet a shapeless thing, also red, fell on the pavement. The boy had bitten his tongue in two and had spit part of it forth into the face of his tormentor.

"'Fire!' cried the latter, furious with rage.

"A discharge of musketry sounded like a peal of thunder, and little Jean, fainting, fell at the moment when old Barrot and his son Louis were killed.

"'And that,' said my friend Dubreuil, 'is the reason why our postman is dumb.'"

JOSEPH MONTET.

GIVING AWAY THE BABY.

A Touching Little Story Told by M. Quad.

Some weeks ago a family consisting of husband wife and a baby about 8 years old, reached Detroit from some Eastern point in a destitute condition, and finally got a room in a house on Catharine street with a citizen whose sympathies had been aroused. For a time both parents were ill, and the man had scarcely recovered when the wife died. Unable to work, and equally unable to care for the child, he permitted a woman living near by to take it home. A day or two ago, having vainly searched for work in Detroit, the man decided to go farther west. Three or four different families offered to take the baby and adopt it, and he was forced to realize that he must part with it. Poor, destitute, friendless, and with only money enough to take him to Chicago, what could he do? When the time came to make a decision there was a crowd of women appealing to him and promising to be a mother to the little waif. He took the child in his arms and wept for it, and said in a broken voice:

"Poor Billy! I'm putting you away forever!"

The child clung fast to his neck with one arm, and with the free hand wiped away his tears and said:

"Pa's crying—pa's crying! Is pa sick?"

The man pressed the boy to his heart, kissed him again and again, and to the woman who was to take him he said:

"It's tearing my heart out, but it must be done! He'll grow up to forget his dead mother and me, and never to hear our names spoken; but I've got to let him go. One more kiss, Billy."

"Papa doin' away?"

"Yes; good bye."

"Dood bye. Hurry home."

The women sobbed and the men shed tears, and all of a sudden the father rushed from the house and hurried from the neighborhood without one glance behind him, doubtless fearing that if he tarried a moment longer his love would prove stronger than his pledge.

The Public Domain.

There are some facts about the "public domain" not generally understood, but very interesting. It is not generally understood, for instance, that it has cost more than has been realized for it. Yet such is the fact. The public domain contains, in round numbers, 1,900,000,000 acres, and has cost $352,000,000, or about nineteen cents per acre. There has been disposed of in various ways 645,000,000 acres for a total of $237,000,000. So that the cost has been over $100,000,000 more than the receipts for land sold thus far. It is also a common assertion that the bulk of the public lands have been disposed of. The fact is that but 645,000,000 acres out of 1,019,000,000 acres have been disposed of, though in this operation the best lands have been selected, and little purely agricultural lands remaining in the hands of the Government. Over 400,000,000 acres of that remaining is counted "desert islands," though it is proximate that much of it will be cultivated hereafter.

FOOLED BY A CIRCUS TRICK

HOW ALL THE COUNTRY WAS TAKEN IN AND MADE TO PAY WELL.

How a Boy Figured in the Ring as Ella Zoyara and How Well the Secret was Kept for Many Years.

One of the most remarkable characters ever connected with the circus profession, says a veteran of the ring, was the rider who was known at different times by the names of Ella Zoyara and Omar Kingsley. He was born of French parents in New Orleans, and while a circus managed by S. Q. Stokes and Signor Louis Germani was exhibiting in that city he was apprenticed to the managers by his parents, being then 7 years old. His real surname Signor Germani has forgotten, and no one else in the business save Stokes knows it, but the Signor remembers that his Christian name was Sam, or "Little Sammie," as everybody called him. He was at once taught to ride, and showed considerable ability. When he was 11 years old Stokes, in view of the boy's singular girl-like beauty, conceived the idea of transforming him as nearly as possible into a female. Accordingly he gave him the name of Ella Zoyara and at once had him attired exactly like a girl. Every article of his dress, both within and without, was precisely like that of a woman, and not only was he dressed in this way in the ring but in private life as well. He never again wore an article of man's apparel till after he was 19 years old. Stokes, resolved to make the illusion as complete as possible, did not even allow any of his company to know that "Ella Zoyara" was not a genuine girl.

This secret remained undiscovered for eight years, during which Stokes took him to Europe, where he created immense excitement. His beauty at that time was remarkable. He had a faultless complexion of the purest brunette type, his face never showing the slightest trace of a beard and his features were perfect and of the most delicate, womanly character, as were also his hands and feet. His hair, of raven blackness, hung in luxuriant masses almost to his waist. I was playing at Astley's in London when he made his first appearance there, and subsequently I traveled through England for four months in the same company with him, and in all that time I never had the slightest suspicion that he was not a girl. It was probably the most successful deception as regards sex ever practiced. Stokes at that time had in his charge a little girl about the same age as the so-called Ella Zoyara, whom she very closely resembled. She and "Ella" were always dressed magnificently in a very similar manner, were always together, and you would take them for twins or at least sisters. When this little girl grew to womanhood she became the wife of Stokes.

Wherever "Ella Zoyara" appeared he completely enthralled many of the male hearts in the audience. He received letters of the most passionate character and magnificent presents from the nobility and gentry of Europe. Among those who worshiped at the shrine of this temple of supposed female loveliness was one of the crowned heads of Germany, who, among other costly things, presented "Ella" with a diamond ring, valued at $8,000, about which I have often heard the latter tell this story: He was riding in a circus in St. Petersburg and the ring being rather loose upon his finger slipped off one afternoon as he was doing his act and flew he knew not where. Almost frantic at the loss of his treasure, he was obliged to finish his act, to dress and to wait until the performance was over before a thorough search for the jewel could be made, and even then it could not be discovered. He left the building disconsolate, never expecting to see his diamond again. But that night as he was flying around the ring upon his horse, he happened to look down and saw a bright glitter in the sawdust at the edge of the ring. The minutes seemed like hours till after the audience had dispersed and then upon going to the spot he found his ring, which he had at once made smaller and never again permitted it to leave his finger.

It was while riding in Germany that, through some untoward circumstance, the fact of his being a man was discovered, after he had successfully carried on this masquerade for more than eight years, and as a consequence he was obliged to make a hasty departure from that country. His entire individuality seemed to have been changed by the deception, which he had practiced so long. He had all the whimsicality and caprices of a woman. Stokes used to buy him long kid gloves reaching to the elbow, but if, when he tried on a new pair, he found in them the slightest wrinkle, he would tear them off violently and throw them away. He had the temper of a virago. After the discovery of his sex, he rode as a man, under the name of Omar Kingsley, and wore male apparel in private life, but he never could break himself of the effeminate manners and habits which he had acquired during his long masquerade.

He continued as an equestrian [illegible] attempted to deceive any one save the circus-going public. He married Sallie Stickney, daughter of Sam P. Stickney, Tidy and Fertile.

Mr. A. W. Cheever, during his summer travels, found "a two-acre farm in New York State," which he describes as "a perfect gem in its way," and he gives some notes of the means employed to keep it fertile and clean, which may help others who, even under the discouraging condition of adjacent land foul with troublesome forms of vegetation, are striving to "till the earth in obedience to scriptural commands":

"We looked it all over without finding weeds either in cultivated ground, lawn, hay field or orchard. The two acres are occupied by a dwelling house, barn, and other buildings, all in good repair, and covered more or less by vines producing fruit or flowers. A wire fence marks the division between it and a neighbor's pasture. Apple trees enough to bear two hundred bushels of fruit occupy a row at one side. An orchard-grass soil gives frequent cuttings of hay, and makes a soft bed to catch the falling fruit. No insects are allowed to destroy tree, leaf or fruit. A garden sufficient for the wants of the family occupies a sheltered corner. In it are straight rows of all the small fruits and vegetables desired.

"The soil is made sufficiently rich, and is well tilled. The surface is kept perfectly clean by frequent shallow rakings with a light steel rake. The raking is done very rapidly, and as a weed is never allowed to get any age, the labor is very light. All the land not required for garden crops is kept continuously in grass. It is top-dressed quite frequently with horse manure and other fertilizing matters, collected and carefully composted on the place. Little or no fertilizer is purchased except wood ashes. The grass is cut several times a year and is fed to a horse.

"In the rear of the horse stable we found a pile of compost squarely and neatly built, upon which daily accumulations of manure and other rubbish, such as peonies from the garden, etc., are spread to decay. Underneath the pile is a tank for collecting drainage. When needed this liquid manure is poured around any garden plants that it is desirable to force, or it may be dipped upon the pile to keep it in proper condition of moisture. By heating and wetting the compost before spreading it upon the grass land no weed seeds are planted with the manure. Frequent cutting of the hay crop prevents weeds from going to seed, etc. Any straggling weed is pulled up when seen."

It is fair to suppose that if the "destiny that shapes our ends" had placed the occupant of the "two-acre farm" in charge of one of average size, the same intelligent and careful thoroughness which give good results in a comparatively small way would have been even more conspicuous on a surface sufficiently extended to enable him to take advantage effectively of all the improved facilities of modern agriculture.

Good For Both.

The French comedian Perlet was extraordinarily thin. At length he became such a skeleton that he consulted a physician, who recommended him to try some baths in the Pyrenees. Having obtained leave of absence from his manager he betook himself to the mineral springs, where he bathed unremittingly, but all in vain; he did not increase in size.

"Patience," urged the doctor; "there is nothing like our baths for making people fat."

One day, while Perlet was waiting philosophically in his bath for an embonpoint which never came, he heard a conversation in the next room, from which his own was divided by only a thin partition, and which was occupied by an enormous woman, fat as the Hottentot Venus.

"Doctor," said she, "I am getting tired of this."

"Why?" asked the Esculapius.

"I have been here two months."

"Well?"

"Well, I am as enormous as I was when I came."

"A little patience, madam," urged the doctor; "there is nothing like our baths for making people thin."

Perlet, hearing these words, sprang out of his bath, dressed, rushed home to his hotel, ordered his bill and left for Paris by the next train.

A Remarkable Buffalo Hunt.

A GREAT HERD CHASED HUNDREDS OF MILES AND THOUSANDS OF ANIMALS KILLED.

A letter from Glendive, Montana, says:—People living near here were surprised the other day by hearing a loud tramping, and through the clouds of dust kicked up they discovered a herd of buffalo making at a mad pace for the river. The animals appeared to be well-nigh run down, but many of them were furious. As they came to the bank of the Yellowstone they plunged in pell mell one on top of the other, and for a time it looked as though many of them would be killed, but nearly all got out uninjured. They had hardly reached the other side when a yelling, swearing crowd of white men and Indians came up on foam-covered horses. They paused here long enough to get refreshment, and then resumed the chase.

There were four or five hundred buffalo in the herd, and they were making for British America as fast as their legs would carry them. From the hunters it was learned that the hunt began down in Dakota, on the Cannon Ball River, where not less than 5,000 of the animals were found grazing. A few of the men had followed them the entire distance, but, although the party that passed here numbered only thirty, its members estimated that from first to last three or four hundred men had taken part in the slaughter. Some of the men who started out with the original party had remained behind at various points to secure the hides, and others, who only joined in for the sport, had dropped out after satisfying themselves with the chase. The rapidity with which these magnificent animals are slaughtered is shown by the fact that the hunters passing through here said they would have the hides of the remnant of the herd before reaching the boundary line.

Probably this is one of the last big buffalo hunts that will ever occur in this country. The Indian, now that he is assured of enough to eat at the agencies, is as reckless in his slaughter of the bison as the white man. He seems to consider the game as nearly extinct, and he goes in recklessly with the idea of having all the sport he can before the end is reached. The wanton destruction of this herd has caused great indignation throughout the entire section traversed, but as it seems to be the policy to exterminate the bison nothing will be done about it.

Domestic Recipes.

A Newport household contributes this recipe for delicious corn soup to the readers of the Hints: Take one dozen ears of corn and one quart of cream; cut the grains of corn through the middle with a very sharp knife; scrape them off. Boil the ears in water enough to cover them, until the sweetness is extracted from them. Strain this liquor, and then take as much of it as you need for the desired quantity of soup, say one quart. Add the cream slowly and stir it gently so that it will not curdle. Put the corn into this and let it cook until it is tender. Add pepper and salt to your taste.

If you are making a large quantity of tomato catsup, the juice which is not boiling may be kept heated by putting into a stone jar and keeping this on the back part of the stove. This will hasten the matter of boiling the catsup, as it will evaporate surprisingly if simply kept hot.

Brown apple sauce, to serve on the platter with pork chops, is made by taking a little soup stock, or if you have some roast-beef gravy it is still nicer; into this put the apples which are peeled and cored and sliced, let them cook until tender in this, season with salt and a little red pepper. When the apples are done beat them until light and soft.

To make sausage keep its shape in flat cakes, after making them the size you wish, dip them into flour; this will effectually prevent their falling apart.

How They Make Putty.

The process of making putty is a very simple one. The principal ingredients are raw linseed oil and whiting. Marble dust is mixed with the whiting, and as it is much cheaper it reduces the cost of the putty. Paraffine oils are used to a great extent instead of linseed, and as the former is the cheaper and inferior oil of the two, the result is to make an inferior article. To knead it, it is put in a chaser—an annular-shaped trough from the center of which rises a vertical shaft. From this shaft two arms extend, on the ends of which are heavy iron wheels that rest in the trough. When the shaft receives the wheels chase each other around the trough. The wholesale price of putty is about two cents per pound.

WE PRINT IT AGAIN.

She was a remarkably sensible young lady who made a request of her friends that after her decease she should not be buried by the side of a brook, where babbling lovers would wake her from her dreams, nor in any grand cemetery, where sight-seers, conning over epitaphs, might distract her, but be laid away to take her last sleep under the counter of some merchant who did not advertise in the newspapers. There, she said, was to be found peace passing all understanding, a depth of quiet slumber on which the sound of neither the buoyant foot of youth nor the weary shuffle of old age would ever intrude.

A TRIBUTE TO THE SUBURBS.

Two Austin gentlemen, Col. Yerger and Sam Bass, were talking about the comparative intelligence of animals.

"I think that a horse is the most intelligent animal," remarked Col. Yerger.

"No, sir, the horse is not. The rat is the shrewdest and smartest little animal I know of. It has a wonderful power of discrimination. We are paying great homage to Gov. Cleveland just now as the man of destiny. Let us not forget Gov. Hendricks, whose great work in Indiana has been so grand and glorious. Is not his right to the title of "man of destiny" worth considering? He was elected Vice president in 1876 and was cheated out of it. In 1884 at Chicago he was again nominated by his party for the place in spite of himself. Nine votes. Now he has carried his State again, has done a vast deal towards carrying the country by his aggressive untiring canvass, and to-day stands re-elected and sure to occupy the office notwithstanding a second scheme of fraud to cheat him out of it. Right will prevail in the end, if we are only patient. All glory to Thos. A. Hendricks.—Ex.

The Railroads.

The Mobile Register contains a thoughtful and timely article on the subject: "The Mission of Railroads." The article considers the railroad question in nearly all of its aspects, and the following extracts are given to show the conclusion arrived at:

"Some way or other, in the past and now, there have been and are, we are to believe the utterances of the prosperity of the press, considerable disturbances existing between railroads and the people—that is, as it were vestigations and observations have resulted in the conclusion that the two are so completely a unit that if it were possible to sever them both would suffer incalculable hurt, if not actual ruin."

* * * * * * *

"Often has it appeared that Mobile was tending backward and in our disappointment we have been prone to charge it to the incidents of railroads. To-day, however, we believe Mobile to be in a condition much more prosperous than ever before. If it be that in any regard we are shorn somewhat of that which once we deemed strength and importance, in other ways we have gathered power in a greatly increased ratio. Diversified industries grow in proportion to increase of population, other things being equal, while a specialty, like the handling of a cotton crop, must be confined to the territory paying tribute; except at the expense of some other center, that territory can never be enlarged."

Legislative.

The revenue bill is perfected and has been ordered to a third reading. It fixes the rate of taxation at 60 cents on the $100, a reduction of five cents. Mr. Whiteside offered an amendment to make it 55 cents. Lost. Mr. Brown, of Tuskaloosa, spoke in favor of the reduction to 60 cents. He based his calculation on the increase of taxable property, and on an increase of $75,000 from licenses, under the new bill. He also called attention to the fact that the new rate on property would not go into effect until October 1st, 1885, while the increased license would go into operation at once. The vote fixing the rate at 60 cents stood:

Ayes: Mr. Speaker, Alberson, Archer, Baltzell, Barker, Bilbro, Bogart, Bullock, of Greene, Burnett, of Conecuh, Branch, Brown, of Jackson, Brown, of Tuskaloosa, Carlisle, Coleman, Cory, Dane, Dowling, Erwin, Gibson, of Lawrence, Godfrey, Gunter, Grant, Graham, Haralson, Hawkins, Hill, of Limestone, Hogue, Holland, Humes, Hundly, Inge, Ingram, Jones, Lang, Larkin, Lawson, Lea, Long, Modawell, Moody, McDonald, McQueen, McWhorter, Newman, O'Bannon, Paschal, Pelham, Patterson, Pickett, Reynolds, Richard, Suttle, of Coosa, Scott, Shields, Shorter, Skinner, Taylor, Tallifero, Toler, Turney, Walker, of Marengo, Wells, Wiley, Willett, Wood—67.

Noes — Ashurst, Bullock, of Franklin, Burke, Burnett, of Cherokee, Burson, Brown of Marion, Callier, Curry, Dunman, Finley, Foulkes, Gibson, of Lowndes, Greene, of Jefferson, Greene, of St. Clair, John, Nesmith, Suttle, of Bibb, Walker of Shelby, White, and Whitesides—21.

Some five or six noes meant that the rate ought to be higher and the balance that it ought to be lower.

The Montgomery Advertiser observes:

The bill of Mr. Foster to prohibit public drunkenness, makes it a misdemeanor, with a fine of not exceeding $100. Why not make a law against an indecency and public nuisance which subjects a man to arrest, fine and imprisonment in all corporate cities? The people of the country are entitled to as much protection as those in corporate towns.

By all means let such bill be passed. The law as it stands in punishing a bar-keeper for allowing a man of known intemperate habits to get drunk is unjust. It should hold accountable the man for getting drunk. Such a measure would result in an immense deal of public good. The man who gets drunk is an offender against the people and should suffer for it.

The bill to increase the Governor's salary failed to pass the House of Representatives. It met the fate it deserved. This State cannot afford to increase its Governor's salary until it can afford to pay its judges better. Our judges do more work for the State than does the Governor, and there should be an equal dignity to each position. Our Governor now gets $3,000 a year with perquisities, while our circuit judges and Chancellors must pay all traveling expenses and hotel bills on a salary of $2,250, with no perquisities.

The House committee on counties and county boundaries have decided to report favorably on the Houston county bill.

Mr. John, member of House from Dallas, is opposed to the revenue bill as presented, on the the grounds that the particular section taxing telephone companies two per cent. on their gross receipts is unconstitutional. The State Constitution does not allow a greater tax rate than three-quarters of one per cent. on personal property. The bill will probably be corrected before it is voted upon.

The House decided not to increase the Auditor's salary.

The world of gossip is excited over the fact that both the Presi-

Senator Pugh and the Tariff.

In accepting the caucus nomination Monday night, he said, speaking of the late success of the Democracy: "We shall favor no rash reactionary and revolutionary changes in the currency and tariff laws which may shock public confidence, derange business and paralyze American institutions."

This section of the state may take courage from the expression of such sentiments, for Senator Pugh will be up to what he says.

Song of An Indiana Editor.

Jasper (Indiana) Times.]

After twenty-four years of weary waiting and watching and praying, victory comes at last. Let us therefore, rejoice and make merry, for the day of our deliverance is come.

Let the floods clap their hands and the hills rejoice.

Sing, shout, yell, whoop, hurrah! Gloria in excelsis!

Bring out the fatted calf; let us eat, drink and be merry. Johnny, fill up the bowl and we'll drink and shout as we go marching round.

Roll the drum, toot the horn, blow a loud blast on the bugle and awaken the screaming fife.

Sound the loud bazoo, jangle the merry zingaroes, and thrill the sweet tintinabulations of the hugag. Sound the lute and the harp, the psaltery and the flute.

Ring out, ye merry bells; ring out the old, ring in the new; ring, ring, ring!

Sing, Jasper, sing, and let all the people shout and sing.

Let the daughter of Debois dance and sing.

From Greenland's icy mountains to Patoka's verdant strand let songs of triumph rise.

Rejoice and kick up your heels, ye burghers; and you, ye yoemen, yell.

Sing unto the Lord a new song, sing, sing, sing.

Arise, get there, Eli, and you Jehosaphat, skip.

Behold, now the Lord hath spoken good concerning Democracy; thanks be to him who hath gotten us the victory.

We're gittin' out de wilderness, der's no mo' ribbers fer to cross.

Play a loud alarum on the tumtum, and awaken the dulcet notes of the dub a dub.

Sound the loud timbrel; play skilfuily upon an harp of a thousand strings.

Oh, come, let us ratify, jollify, glorify, celebrate, jubilate.

Leap for joy, ye old men, and you, ye kids, skedaddle.

Gloria in excelsis! Laudate Dominum. Venite exultemus.

The year of jubilee has come; return, ye hungry pilgrims, home; a royal feast is spread.

After the campaign closed, the democratic committee found itself $10,000 in debt and no cash on hand. The veteran doer of good deeds, W. W. Corcoran, the banker, drew his check for the amount and wiped out the debt.

Tax Collector Honeycutt is on his rounds, and he reports slow collections, an evidence of tight times. Pay your taxes promptly and save cost.

A bill has passed the Legislature giving DeKalb an additional week of court. When is Chilton going to have her court term extended. More time is badly needed for the terms of court in this county, and an extension would be a saving of considerable expense to the county. We hope our representative will look after the matter.

The saw mill property known as the Freeman saw mill, later as the Hall saw mill, situated one mile from Clanton was sold at Chancery sale on last Monday by Register Stewart. The Chilton County Medical Association met at Clanton on Monday. After transacting the business of the meeting, the good doctors assembled at the residence of Mrs. A. M. Adams, where a collation had been spread by the local medical fraternity. The VIEW was represented at the latter, and its representative enjoyed the jokes and the dinner of the pill pushers immensely. He left satisfied that doctors can kill melancholy as well as kill men.

All our subscribers who will pay their subscription to this paper in full to date, and one year in advance, will be presented with one year's subscription to the "American Farmer" a sixteen-page Agricultural Magazine, published by E. A. K. Hackett, at Fort Wayne, Indiana, and which is rapidly taking rank as one of the leading Agricultural publications of the country. It is devoted exclusively to the interest of the farmer, stock breeder, dairyman, gardner, and their household, and every species of industry connected with that portion of the people of the world, the farmers. The subscription price is one dollar per year. Farmers can not well get along without it. It puts new ideas into their minds. It teaches them how to farm with profit to themselves. It makes the home happy, the young folks cheerful, the growler contented, the downcast happy, and the demagogue honest.

MR. LAWRENCE—There is one lovely feature to our CHILTON VIEW. Its efforts are so earnest for the promotion of the general interest of the country at large. In view of this fact, I offer my little mite of help. As the church has the greatest power to promote good, my subject shall be in reference to how she can use it.

It is amazing, I then say, how the church seems to be asleep on the evil of useless adornment; and the many sins which spring from it. Even the ministry, to a great extent, is overlooking it also.

I was in Montgomery, Ala., once at my own church, when a lady went forward to take upon herself the necessary vows for church membership. If I am not mistaken, a rich trail of silk and velvet one half yard in length, swept the floor behind her, while a profusion of laces, ribbons, and flowers drooped from her hat. There she stood at God's altar a living monument of the pomp and vanity of the world. Yet when the minister asked, "Do you renounce the Devil and all his works, the vain pomp and glory of the world?" She answered "I renounce them all." The minister, seemingly regardless of the mockery, which was being performed at the sacred altar, continued the services, and when it was finished she was numbered among the "white washed throng."

I can give you another instance of something of the same character. I once knew a lady who said it made her sorry to think of it snowing, on account of the bare-footed poor; yet she wears a pair of earrings, which would buy a pair of shoes for some of them. When she was reminded of this fact she said: "Oh my husband likes for me to wear them and I must please him." My poor little street wanderers! these church members are sorry for you they say, and if they could get all they wanted themselves, and feed their dear husbands vanity by adorning themselves in ribbons, laces, earrings, finger-rings and such like, and have any left, no doubt they would drop you a dime occasionally. I expect they do help you some but may God help you more!

Now arises this question. Does a just God give all these useless trinkets to some and let some suffer from bare hunger and cold? I answer no, God does not give it and whoever wears it is wearing stolen goods. For God entrusts us with this means—it is his means not ours, for the earth is the Lords and the fullness thereof—and he expects us to use this means in the best way which will honor and glorify him. He allows us a salary for our necessary comforts. If we go beyond this, we are stealing from the master. The church is doing this very thing, and it is why infidelity stalks so boldly through our land. It looks to the church for an exemplifier of the bible, but alas! the light is dim, and the grievous consequences are, that the sweet story of Jesus and the cross, is pronounced a superstitious myth, and the church, a body of creeping hypocrites.

God speed the day, when holiness of life and purpose may uproot the seed of inbread sin in the human heart and thus bring forth the true character of the religion of Jesus Christ. In that day every christian will stand upon the solid foundation of "Holiness to the Lord of Hosts." Then the church can present to the world the golden key which unlocks the mystery of Holy Writ.

President Seay occupies the seat in the Senate of the late lamented Appletodby during the black era of reconstruction; Senator Mosely, on the left, near the door, occupies the seat where the colored statesman, Royal, tried many weeks and months to learn the alphabet; Senator Moren, is where the oily tongued Pennington, of Delaware, performed; Senator Street has taken the cushioned chair of Yordy, of New York; Whitney, of Massachusetts, who always favored an "appropriation," large or small, had the seat of Senator Jones, of Wilcox; Senator Sterrett, of Jefferson, fell heir to the seat of Sly Coon, of Ohio; Judge Falkner has the seat where Slippery Glass used to sleep; the ebony statesman, Jere Haralson, occupied the seat now assigned to Senator Mitchell; Buckley, of Illinois, spouted from the desk now held by Judge Henry, of Butler; Aleck Curtis, the best behaved person in the lot, lounged in the seat where Senator Simpson is; Dereen, of Massachusetts, stood about the stove or in the closets most of the time, but claimed the seat now occupied by Senator Griffin; Farden, of Illinois, kept on talking for "this bill," from where Senator Alexander is now located; Coal Black Jim Green who went "again dis bill kase it mout git up a war twixt de extendin' races," was where Senator Samford is now. Sibley, of Iowa, was where Senator Troy watched events; old Industrial Resources Lambert, of no where, thar'd and whar'd from Senator Gardner's cosy quarters; Barr, of "Rosting," tried to talk like a preacher from where Senator Davidson now talk songs; old man Richards, of New Hampshire, stood with his gold glasses, and looked like a fool, from where Senator Saney is ensconced; Jake Black, of Iowa, who favored "more voting and less talking," scape-goated continually from Senator McSpadden's desk. And so on to the end, all from memory of the dark long ago.

What a change, eh, Grover Cleveland and Tom Hendricks.

Laws Relating to Newspaper Subscriptions.

The following is the decision of the United States Supreme Court:

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered wishing to continue their subscription.

2. If subscribers order the discontinuance of their periodicals the publishers may continue to send them until all arrearages are paid.

3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their periodicals from the office to which they are directed, they are held responsible until they have settled their bills and ordered them discontinued.

4. If subscribers move to other places without notifying the publishers, and the papers are sent to the former direction, they are held responsible.

The courts have decided that refusing to take periodicals from the office, or removing and leaving them uncalled for, is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.

TOLLESBORO, KY.

DR. S. B. HARTMAN & Co., Columbus, Ohio.—I keep the largest stock of medicines of any store in Lewis county, with the exception of a drug store at Vanceburg, our county seat, and am selling a great deal of your PERUNA and MANALIN. It is giving the best satisfaction o any medicine that I ever handled. In one case the constable for the precinct, has been very sick and low spirited for a long time. For several years he has tried all the doctors here, and we have some good ones, and they did him no good. After much persuasion I sold him two bottles of PERUNA and MANALIN. He took half of the medicine. I could see a great change in him, and now he is as sound a man apparently as there is in the vicinity and he says he is entirely well. He is a number one man and is highly respected. He is satisfied that your medicine saved his life, after all the doctors and all med cines had failed. Being unacquainted with you, I refer you to Jones, Shillito & Co., Astor, Pinckard & Co., and other business houses of Cincinnati.

R. L. GILLESPIE, P. M.

Messrs. Adamson & Shipley, of Waynesburg, Pa., write: "Please send us some "Ills of Life" immediately. We are having a big run on your medicine, PERUNA. Instead of dying out, like most medicines, in course of time, it seems to be growing in favor. We sell lots of it. Please send the books soon."

Messrs. Worthman & Urban, of Allegheny City, Pa., write: "Having a large sale for your PERUNA and MANALIN, we have also many calls for your book, "Ills of Life." Please send us a supply of them, German and English, and oblige."

S. Wolf & Son, Walmot, O., write: "Gentlemen: We handle your goods, and they give good satisfaction."

A. G. Sellards, Greenup, Ky., says: "Gentlemen: I am handling your medicines, and having a good trade on them."

J. C. Saunders, Martinsburg, W Va., writes: "Gentlemen: Your PERUNA sells fast and gives good satisfaction here. We sell more PERUNA than any other preparation we handle."

W. Bauer, St. Mary's, Pa., writes: "My son is still improving in health. Your PERUNA is just the thing for him."

H. L. Day & Co., New Vienna, Ohio, write: "S. B. HARTMAN & Co., Columbus, Ohio.—Gentlemen: Your PERUNA sells as well as any medicine with us. Quite a number have told us that PERUNA is the best thing they ever used."

Notes from Beecher's Sunday Sermon

Mr. Beecher's text on Sunday was Exodus, xxxiv., 6, 7. Below are given some passages taken here and there:

"When I read in some of the books of the Old Testament that God spake to His servant face to face, and then see what He said, I don't believe a word of it."

"When you consider what the true mission of pain and penalty is in this world; that it is not revenge; that it is medicine; that it is direction; that it is education; that it is an influence that keeps men from things bad and incites them to things good; when we consider that this is the mission of pain and penalty, it is a subject of as much gratitude as the direct mercy of God himself."

"The laws of God are God's roads for people's thoughts to walk on and for their feet to tread, and the declaration that He will enforce those laws, and so seek the welfare of men here and hereafter, is a declaration that should be ranked as God's benevolence."

"Meanness is the very bottom and dripping of sin."

"Society, and largely public sentiment, is infidel, is atheistic—not on purpose, but through weakness. Society stands in the way of the return from evil by public sentiment, and when you hear the utterances of men about criminals, or about the downfall of any man, their language is full of butchery, worse, contempt, suspicion. Men won't crush him—no, not with a ten foot pole."

MADE OF A TREE OR UM.—A Vermont farmer's boy has bought himself a bicycle, and wishes he hadn't. His mother has utilized the thing by attaching it to a Scotch motive power for his spinning mill, corn sheller and grindstone. This is done by suspending it from the ceiling, removing the tire from the rear wheel and connecting it by an endless [illegible]

The members mentioned advanced in a sheepish, hesitating manner, and when grouped before the President's desk he continued:

Bill Tweed in Washington.

Perley in his reminiscences says: "Another noted person who visited Washington early in the administration of Mr. Fillmore was William M. Tweed, of New York, who came as foreman of the American Engine Company No. 6, which was composed of young volunteer firemen. Visiting the White House, the company were ushered into the East Room, where President Fillmore soon appeared, and Tweed, stepping out in front of his command, said: "These are Big Six's boys, Mr. President." He then walked along the line with Mr. Fillmore and introduced each member individually. As they were leaving the room a newspaper reporter asked Tweed why he had not made a longer speech. "There was no necessity," replied the future pillager of the City Treasury of New York, "for the company is as much grander than any other fire company in this world as Niagara Falls is grander than Croton dam." Two years afterward Tweed, profiting by a division in the Whig ranks in the Fifth District of New York, returned to Washington as a representative in Congress. He was a regular attendant, never participating in the debates and always voting with the Democrats. Twice he read speeches which were written for him, and he obtained for a relative the contract for supplying the House with chairs for summer use, which were worthless and soon disappeared."

The Rugby Colony.

Last week was a great one at the Rugby Colony in Tennessee. "Tom" Hughes was there, with Bishop Quintard, and several representatives of the English board of managers. The meeting was made the occasion of asserting the prosperity of the enterprise against reports to the contrary.

It appears that the suggestion originally came from Boston, and that Englishmen contributed only part of the first capital ($100,000) subscribed. About 30,000 acres of land were bought, the village was laid out, and colonization began in 1881. Since that time, more than $300,000 altogether, exclusive of purchasing the land, has been raised by bonds and expended on the property, nobody having drawn out anything in the shape of dividends or profits of any kind. Mr. Hughes is now selling the [illegible]

NEWSPAPER FABLES.

The Editor and the Paste Pot—The Indignant Citizen—A Frost Reader's Love. Etc.

[From the Detroit Free Press.]

While the Editor of an Afternoon Paper was Shearing four columns of Matter from a Morning Daily to be used as "Strictly Original News" in his Own Issue a Cockroach Climbed into the Paste-pot and Proceeded to Satisfy his Hunger. He had not Eaten above three Mouthfuls when the Editor seized him by the Neck and Flung him to the floor with such Violence as to Break Three Legs and Fracture a Rib or two.

"On what Theory do you Defend Such Outrageous Conduct?" demanded the poor Cockroach as he lay Helpless on his back.

"Why, you were Stealing my Paste."

"Exactly, but you were Stealing Copy!"

MORAL:

Two Steals don't make a Right, but you can't Blame the Cockroach for Feeling that this Conduct was Excusable under the Circumstances.

THE INDIGNANT CITIZEN.

A Citizen who "had had his Attention Called" to an Item in a Newspaper which Seemed to Reflect on his Integrity of Character, made a Bee-Line for the office to Thrash the Editor. At the head of the second flight of Stairs he Paused to Wonder if it would not be Wiser to Demand a Retraction. At the third landing he had almost Decided that the Item Contained no Insinuations. At the fourth he Decided to Send the Thrashing by Letter. At the fifth he met the Editor whom he Started Out to find and handed him the Cash for a Year's Subscription in Advance.

MORAL:

First Impulses are more apt to be Wrong than Right.

THE DISAPPOINTED REPORTER.

A Reporter who had Walked two miles on the Rumor of a Murder, discovered the Supposed Victim alive and in the Best of Spirits, and in his great Disappointment he cried out:

"Alas! but I had hoped to find you with your Throat Cut, and I have had my tramp for Nothing!"

"While it is true that I am Alive!" replied the Citizen after due reflection, "it Hurts my Feelings to see you so Cast Down, and I will therefore Kill my Mother-in-law and give you the Scoop on all the Other Papers."

MORAL:

Disappointment is sometimes the Forerunner of Luck.

THE PROOF-READER AND THE ORATOR.

An Orator who had Delivered a "little Off-hand Address" at a Public Meeting, carried the Manuscript down to his Favorite Newspaper to be published. Next morning, when he came to read the Matter, he Discovered that the sentence, "The Bulwarks of Liberty," had been changed to "The Bullrushes of Livonia." In great Pain and Consternation he Rushed down to the office and sought out the Proof-Reader and exclaimed:

"Alas! that you should have made me the Victim of Ridicule and Contempt! I feel as if I could Paralyze you!"

"Gently, my Friend," was the calm reply. "Had you halted at the door below, you would have found the Editor writing a Second Page Article in Praise of this very Sentence, which he Declares to be Original and bound to have a Run. My Inadvertence will make you Famous."

MORAL:

There's none in it. The Proof-Reader always manages to Wriggle Out, no matter how Small the Knot-Hole.

Eight Tons of Coal.

A PASTOR WHO SAYS MERCHANTS MUST GIVE UP THE TRICKS OF TRADE IF THEY WANT TO GET TO HEAVEN.

"I once ordered eight tons of coal," said Pastor James M. King in the Eighteenth Street Methodist Church, New York, on Sunday evening, "and when it came home I discovered that I had received barely six tons. I had been defrauded by underweight.

"Merchants nowadays try to excuse these things by laughing them off as tricks of the trade. They are considered part of the modern competitive methods in commerce, and classed with the so-called smart system of showing a fine sample to induce the purchase of an inferior article, of putting fine fruit at the top of the basket to conceal the rottenness beneath, and corking things up in bottles the bottoms of which are mysteriously drawn up toward the top. Honest men are beginning to say that they will be driven to the wall unless they resort to the same dishonest tricks as their unscrupulous competitors.

"It is a saddening and shameful condition of affairs. If these short-sighted persons, who smother conscience in their race to get riches by any means, could only have the spiritual vision to see that with every light weight they palm off on the consumer their character becomes lighter and more worthless, and their chance of heaven less, they would be forced back to honesty by the very picture of themselves that contorted their spiritual vision. No man who believes in God can resort to the business methods that Solomon tells us are an abomination in God's sight."

A LOVE-BIRD.—The Colorado Clipper says: A citizen of Tarrant county, whose wife was sick, wishing to go for his daughter, who was sixty miles distant on a visit, in the absence of a horse, rode a two-year-old bull, making the round trip—120 miles—in forty-eight hours. He said the bovine was rather too poor to ride without a saddle, and as he [illegible]

He Had the Password.

During the camping of the First Regiment at Santa Rosa, the pickets found considerable difficulty in preventing the men absenting themselves without leave.

One particularly sultry evening, while the sentinels were pacing their beats, one of the guards observed a private approaching, who was staggering under the combined load of much conviviality and an enormous watermelon under each arm.

"Who goes there?"

"Er—hic—er fren," responded the truant.

"Advance, friend, and give the countersign."

"Hain't got no—hic—countersign," amiably replied the private; "but I'll er—hic—give yer er—hic—watmellin."

Pretty soon the officer of the day came round and said to the sentinel, who was absorbed in munching a huge piece of watermelon stuck on the end of his bayonet.

"Did Perkins pass you just now?"

"Yes, sir."

"Did he give the countersign?" inquired the lieutenant, taking a bite himself as the man presented arms.

"Well, no, sir," said the sentinel, confidentially; "the password was 'Cholera,' but he said 'Watermelon,' so I passed him and put the other half in your tent."

"Did; eh?" mused the officer. "Ham! watermelon, eh? Well, I guess that was near enough!"—San Francisco Post.

Women's Educational Facilities.

The greatest educational facilities yet granted to women, however, have been given in England, in Sweden, and in Denmark. In Denmark women are admitted to the only university, and may take their degree in everything except theology, there being eleven of them there at present. They are admitted also to the Christiania University in Norway, and are allowed to compete for all academical degrees and scholarships. In Sweden women were admitted to the universities so long ago as 1870, and there is a scholarship for female study at the University of Lund, at that of Upsala, and in the Medical School of Stockholm. Here the exactions are severe, as it is right they should be, the course of study running from eight to ten years, and three examinations being required.

A Case Beyond Help.

Dr. M. H. Hinsdale, Kenawee, Ill., advises us of a remarkable cure of consumption. He says; "a neighbor's wife was attacked with violent lung disease and pronounced beyond help from quick consumption. As a last resort the family was persuaded to try Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the Lungs. To the astonishment of all, by the time she had used one half dozen bottles, she was about the house doing her own work. I saw her at her worst, and had no idea she could recover.

The new Upright Pianos of Mason & Hamlin are highly praised by good judges. They possess a refinement of musical tone which charms the connoisseur and all who hear it. This is owing largely to the new system of their construction. The great experience of Mason & Hamlin in their organ business, with the aid of their large corps of superior musical and mechanical experts, has enabled them, after several years of expensive experiments, to produce a piano which bids fair to do more for their reputation than even their famous organs have accomplished. Their chief improvement consists in securing the strings by metallic fastenings, instead of pins held by friction; which renders it easy to put the three strings of each tone exactly in unison, and thereby produce tones of wonderful sweetness and purity. Messrs. Mason & Hamlin have made 150,000 cabinet organs. They can hardly hope to reach this number of pianos, but we doubt not their new "uprights" will command a very large sale.—Boston Traveller.

THE MAN WHO NEVER ADVERTISES.

Slow business men the dark and doleful fate
Of him who labors but that he may wait;
The piles of goods heaped up within his store,
Which can't be less, and never may be more;
The man whose life has lost all fortune's prizes;
In fact, the man who never advertises.

Wing of his start, his great ambition's scope
The capital that gave him cause to hope,
His credit large, his full and ample stock,
His bank account as solid as a rock
Then tell the doom to which the man was fated
Who never advertised, but simply waited.

So simply and so vainly! Splendid designs,
Which basement art irradiates and refines,
Plate glass show windows, elegantly dressed,
Such lovely clerks, cashiers, and all the rest,
Serve but to show him how the public sizes
The style of him who never advertises.

He waited and all waited; clerks, cashiers,
Salesmen, saleswomen, such delightful dears,
In patient waited all the summer through,
With precious little for the crowd to do.
The public saw—that fact there's no denying—
And passed the store without a thought of buying.

Partners was dull, but salaries and rent
Went on relentless and credit both were spent;
The silly specialist hoped his luck would turn,
Until the sheriff closed the whole concern.
Now, at a pittance which his scorn despises,
He works for one who always advertises.

Too Good.

Jacob Honeybane never was a boy. He might have had a young body, but his mind was always mature. His character and ability sprang up fully grown and formed, as Minerva rose from the head of Jupiter. The boy was not so much "the father of the man" as the man himself.

He was so good. His goodness was his capital. He traded on it. Even in his early days the old folks loved him, and "we boys" hated him for it. It was a standing reproach to us. It exceeded alike our aspiration and capacity. We were quite willing that he and others should be "wrapped up in it" if they would only have left us alone, but he was continually thrown at our heads. Every slip and trepass of ours was greeted thus:

"Why do you not follow the example of your schoolmate, Jacob Honeybane? Instead of getting into disgrace he goes about doing good. He never shames his parent or his teacher but proves an honor to both."

To have Jacob Honeybane always shot at us in this manner, to give point to a moral or an upbraiding, made us dislike him from the bottom of our hearts, and we felt that about the greatest of forbidden pleasures was the privilege of giving him a thrashing. The thought of indulging in this luxury was not foreign to our purposes, but the wisest head among us concluded that, hard as it was to stand Jacob, as a prig, he would, as a martyr, be ten times worse to endure and more than human nature could bear.

Jacob's goodness was not only exemplary but profitable—at least to himself. He was a great favorite with the pious, his manners were so smooth and plausible, and he was much admired by the fair, both young and old. He associated himself, in some capacity, with every charitable, moral and religious society and made himself very useful, especially in collecting subscriptions. He dressed handsomely, always had plenty of money, although the son of a poor widow, and was the recipient of thrice as many presents as any other boy I knew.

It would be vain for me to attempt to enumerate half the virtues of Jacob Honeybane, but that which I envied most was his cool, imperturable, matchless impudence. Difference, from which I suffered so much, was an element entirely foreign to his being, and a perfectly easy, ingratiating intrusiveness as natural to him as breathing. His schoolmates, including myself, used to pretend to despise him, yet we shrank from strife with him, for we felt that our physical strength would prove no match for his moral force on any contested point.

Although Jacob Honeybane was so great a plague to us, he was as much beyond our reach or control as a moral epidemic. It was impossible for any good to be done without him. Did a poor widow or an orphan require relief, had a laborer met with a disabling accident, was any one down with a dangerous sickness, lacking proper attendance, was somebody unjustly dealt with or persecuted, did a miserable drunken husband and father neglect his family and leave them to vice or starvation, whoever else might interfere in the matter with the best intentions, he was sure to find Jacob Honeybane before him, already busy in the case, fluent, prompt and practical, forward to talk, exhort, pray, assist, det, and solicit and collect subscriptions. What could be done with such a being? He was a sad nuisance to the boys who wished to enjoy life and spend their money in their own way. Yet how could we resent his pious forays on our pocket money? If any one of us became involved in trouble, he spared no pains to extricate us, and if we fell sick he proved the best of nurses. No contagion could keep him from the bedside of the sick or dying, and he stood by the culprit, too, however grave his offence, to plead with and for him, and to reconcile him to his teachers, his parents or his God.

Thus did Jacob Honeybane tie our hands and our tongues. Permanent and beneficent conversions were traced to his agency. John Hardhead, now a meek and exemplary member of the Methodist Church, was formerly a brawler and a sot. He used to beat and starve his wife and children. While he was engaged in the former diversion Jacob had the pluck to interfere and was knocked down for his pains.

"Stand up till I knock you down again," said the ruffian.

"Let me get upon my knees so that I may pray," answered Jacob.

Jack Hardhead laughed; but before Jacob's prayer was ended he kneeled by his side, and from that hour became a wholly-changed and reformed character. As Jacob H[illegible] work there. His idea of contributing at once to the bodily and spiritual welfare of those he visited was excellent, and always secured a ready welcome and acceptance. There is no doubt that the wholesome delicacies, the cheer, and the spiritual hope, he gave to patients in the hospital alleviated the sufferings of many and saved some from the grave. He was very successful in the jail, but his greatest triumph of all consisted in obtaining a confession from one prisoner which saved another from the gallows to which he had been doomed by a deluded jury. The really guilty one had to take the place of the unjustly condemned; but Jacob, by the strenuous exertion of all the influence and power he could command, secured the commutation of his sentence to imprisonment for a term of years.

We were all forced to look upon Jacob Honeybane as a remarkable character, destined, should he live, to great eminence. The boys used to speculate on the subject and wonder what he would be, but much as we had learned to admire him, none of us was sorry when he left school, for he was a heavy tax on our slender purses. He never lost sight of me, however, and always visited me at my home during vacations. He appeared to be fulfilling his early promise. He already occupied several positions of trust. His name and speeches continually appeared in the reports of religious, philanthropic, moral and scientific conventions; he seemed to be doing a vast deal of good; he possessed the esteem and confidence of all; he was restlessly active and circulated everywhere. When I quitted school and went into my uncle's counting room, he hunted me up there with his dreaded subscription lists, and not only taxed me oppressively, but also my relatives and business and social connections, for it was impossible to hide them from his prying pertinacity. I never met so great a devotee to the cause of missions as he was, and I fervently pray that I shall never see his like again.

I always felt that Jacob Honeybane was too good—too good by half, and that his goodness was a great and costly luxury, not to say a bore. In refreshing contrast to him was the charming little lady to whom I devoutly paid my addresses. Her name was Fanny Darlington. She did not (bless her for that!) desire or pretend to be an angel. Vanity and self were her idols, and she took no pains to keep them out of sight. Indeed her ingenuous display of their self-satisfied littleness was one of her most attractive charms.

"What do you mean by sending that pious wretch Honeybane to me?" she demanded one evening, before I had fairly crossed her threshold. "He tried to rob me."

"Rob you?"

"Yes, for the benefit of the heathen. He says they are starving."

"The heathen!"

"Yes; I told him that they are better off than starving Christians. They can eat one another, but Christians are denied that privilege."

"He meant starving for want of the Gospel."

"Oh, yes, he said so, and I told him that they are welcome to all the Gospel I have."

"But not to your money."

"I am in want myself of the necessaries of life—even perfumes. He has no conception of my privations."

"Nor I, Fanny."

"Of course; you have no consideration for others."

"My heart bleeds for you, Fanny."

"Yet this missionary of yours and friend of the benighted would persuade me that the heathen—even their princesses—are worse off than I am."

"Don't you think they are?"

"No; I am sure it must be very nice to be a heathen, and not to have to go to church every Sunday. Think of the many long, dreary sermons they escape! Why don't the heathen send out missionaries?"

"Do you feel like being converted, Fanny?"

"I do, George, when I think of Honeybane and Dr. Neverend."

"I sympathize with your views on sermons, Fanny, for I likewise have suffered; but still I think the heathen must be in a bad way if, as you say, they eat one another."

"Some Christians are no better," said Fanny, with emphasis. "There's Emma Blinkley and Emily Bolt, for instance. I am sure they would like to eat me, if they could. The will is as bad as the deed."

"I hope you don't feel like a cannibal, Fanny."

"If I don't, George, it is only because I don't know any one nice enough to eat."

"Then you hardly thought it worth while to subscribe toward the conversion of the heathen."

"Certainly not—Launcelot Gobbo was right. We need no more Christians; they are crowding one another too much already. I am sure you would have thought so if you had assisted at Mrs. Snobton's party the other night. We were all wedged in so tight that Miss Blanche Angel was in great distress. She had not even room enough to flirt."

"Indeed!"

"I mean with more than half a dozen at a time."

Miss Fanny Darlington was a selfish little despotic beauty, making no pretension to any regard for the feelings, or reverence for the prejudices of others. She sometimes gave great offence by her bluntness and sarcasm. She did not spare even my rich old bachelor uncle, and his superb wig was a favorite mark for her shafts of ridicule. He was much ruffled by the freedom of her remarks, and gave me to understand that if I married her, I need expect nothing from him. As I had fondly hoped, she treated Jacob Honeybane no better. She sometimes gave great offence by her bluntness and sarcasm. She did not spare even my rich old bachelor uncle, and his superb wig was a favorite mark for her shafts of ridicule. He was much ruffled by the freedom of her remarks, and gave me to understand that if I married her, I need expect nothing from him. As I had fondly hoped, she treated Jacob Honeybane no better. She laughed his sanctimony to scorn, and turned his meekness into ridicule in a witty and merciless fashion. Her wayward humor, sauey frankness and childish petulancy, grated on [illegible] ness and keep it on the stretch of suspense and torture. He was flattered by the smiles and even the sighs of many a blameless and pious beauty, but the charms of such were powerless in comparison with the spell cast over him by the reckless, godless little Fanny Darlington. She seemed to find delight in outraging his sanctitude by her profane audacity. Strange contradiction! The very qualities by which, to be consistent, he should have been shocked and disgusted, appeared to attract him.

When my uncle died and left me his fortune, I felt that I was in a position to settle myself in life. Honeybane expected me to multiply my subscriptions, but I told him that I was under the necessity of curtailing them, as I was about to embark in the costly experiment of matrimony.

"With whom?" he demanded.

"Fanny Darlington," I replied.

He turned pale.

"You have, I hear, already become bondsman for your old schoolmate and friend, Mr. Henry Starwell, in the sum of fifty thousand dollars," said he thoughtfully.

"What of that?" I answered. "Were it a million I should be perfectly secure."

"He gambles."

"How do you know that? Do you visit gambling hells?"

"It is my duty as an active and leading member of the Society for the Suppression of Gambling."

"I must see myself before I can believe it."

"You shall, and it is right you should, not only for your own but for Fanny's sake."

Honeybane kept his word. I was made, in a disguise which Harry Starwell did not penetrate, the witness of his insanity. I saw him lose several thousand dollars in one night. It was enough.

"What shall I do?" said I to Honeybane.

"If you disturb your bond now," he replied, "you will excite suspicion and provoke investigation. Mr. Starwell's accounts will not bear that, I fear. Should they show him to be a defaulter to the government, that would ruin you."

"You seem to know everything, Jacob," I said. "You saved me often at school; can you not save me now?"

"Make a conveyance of your property to some one you can trust and have it duly recorded. Then be open with Starwell, and, if necessary, surrender him, and relieve yourself, in connection with him, of all responsibility. The reconveyance you can, in the meanwhile, have already signed and retain and record as soon as you are free. The expedient is the best I can devise and perfectly safe."

"I know no one so trustworthy as yourself, Jacob," I said, "and I leave the execution of the business entirely to you."

Honeybane was prompt. I signed the necessary papers, and in a few days he told me it was time for me to withdraw my bond. I was frank with Harry Starwell and gave him a brief time to procure another bondsman. He succeeded in obtaining one, and I was apparently free from danger, but when I attempted to perfect the reconveyance of my property from Honeybane to myself, I discovered to my astonishment, indignation and dismay, that the deed and papers had been abstracted from my desk. A suspicion for the first time flashed across my mind that he was playing me false, and that I had been entrapped. His persistence in keeping out of my way strengthened this misgiving, and I was driven wild with exasperation and despair.

"What is the matter with you, George?" said Fanny to me one evening. "Do you know that you have been lately displaying symptoms of insanity? I hardly need tell you that I hate to have anything to do with other people's troubles because I have too many of my own, but since you are to be my husband, I wish it to be perfectly understood that you are to keep no secrets from me. Confidence for confidence is fair. Do you know that your abstracted and eccentric manner tempts me to suspect that you are either a ruined man or a lunatic."

"Both! both!" I exclaimed, throwing myself on the floor, and giving way to the paroxysm of despair which I had so long been attempting to suppress.

"The right of ruining you is mine," said Fanny. "Who has dared to rob me of it?"

"Jacob Honeybane."

"You slander that pious young gentleman," she answered. "We have grown very intimate and confidential of late, and I challenge you to prove your words."

I recounted his treachery to me, but derived no consolation from the air of levity with which she listened to my recital.

"If you think I am bound to marry a beggar," she said, with some bitterness, "you certainly cannot expect me to unite myself for life to a fool."

"I deserve all your reproaches," I replied. "I cannot blame you if you break off our engagement. There are but two things left me to do—to shoot Jacob Honeybane and blow my own brains out."

"I am glad," she said, "that although you want sense, you have some spirit. But you will be astonished to learn that you have brought me no news. Jacob has told me your story already—indeed, to confess the truth, I joined with him in the plot against you."

I looked aghast, but said firmly, "I cannot believe you."

"Of course not," she said, coolly, "but I can prove my words. Jacob, who you must know is still an ardent suitor of mine, first dropped some hints which led me to encourage him, till I had coaxed the whole secret out of his lurking place. I reward him that I should marry the eldest near uncle left, also whose hands an event fell, especially if it came into his. Thus we grew confidants. He treated me freely as [illegible] or a goose. Which do you think the more eligible?"

"Since the fox has plucked the goose, you had better take the fox," I answered, in her own vein.

"I do not wish for too sharp a husband," said Fanny laughing. "Mankind owes a debt of gratitude to geese which has never been paid. They saved Rome, the greatest city, and I will save you, the biggest goose."

She went to her private writing desk, unlocked it, took out a paper and handed it to me. To my astonishment and delight, I perceived that it was Jacob Honeybane's conveyance to me of my property.

Fanny continued:

"Heaven forgive the deceit it cost me to prevent the destruction and obtain possession of this paper. When I found that you were overmatched by Jacob, I considered it my duty to come to your rescue. It was a sharp contest—a hypocrite's cunning against a woman's wit. The victory is mine, but had not the pious rogue been infatuated with me, I never should have won."

"What a debt I owe you!" I exclaimed with rapture. "How can I ever repay it?"

"I shall be most happy to teach you that," she said. "In the first place you must bring that scamp Honeybane to justice. He is the treasurer, collector or financial manager of half a dozen or more religious and charitable societies, and I have reason to believe that he is robbing them all. It is your duty to expose him?"

For a moment Fanny looked very serious. Her heightened color and flashing eyes, and the shrewdness and penetration she had displayed, gave me a glimpse of the depth and strength of her character. I was almost as much overjoyed at the discovery as at my escape from the clutches of Jacob Honeybane. I did not hesitate to pursue him with retributive justice. I took the pains to inform the societies and corporations for which he acted in various fiduciary capacities, of his dishonesty, and started a thorough investigation into his accounts. The result was disastrous to Honeybane. The peculations in which he had indulged, artfully as they had been covered up, could no longer be concealed. The society which had suffered the least by them was the very one which pursued him with the greatest severity. He was arrested and thrown into prison.

I visited him in jail. He gazed at me with surprise, but not with displeasure, as I entered his cell.

"Well," said he, "in what mood do you come?"

"More in sorrow than in anger," I replied.

"You were provoked to do all you have done," he said, "but I do not ascribe my ruin to you. I am betrayed by my own infatuation."

"For Fanny?"

"Yes."

"You feel bitterly toward her?"

"Oh, no, no, no!" he said eagerly. "It was all my fault and folly. I pretended to be an angel; she to be a devil. She saw through my disguise, but I did not penetrate hers. I thought her like myself, but she was faithful to justice and to you. There was but one way to save you, and that was by destroying me, and she chose it. I do not blame her; I cannot hate her; I love her still."

"Now you are down, she pities you."

"My fall was inevitable," he said solemnly. "It was only a question of time. I thought that the possession of your wealth would prevent it, and but for my mad passion for Fanny, it would at least have delayed it for a time."

"What has become of the money you have embezzled?"

"I have not wasted a cent upon myself. I have given it all away in the cause of charity and religion. The vanity of seeming a model of piety and goodness has been my ruin. It was my misfortune that I had no steadfast interior principle. Not to be, but to appear, better than any one else was always the height of my ambition. I was never happy unless I was attracting admiration. Secret beneficence was nothing to me—I never could do it. I have wasted myself, my earnings—all that I could beg, borrow or steal in the ostentation of charity. I have sold my eternal soul to keep up the semblance of righteousness and the parade of religion. In grasping at the shadow of goodness I have fallen into the abyss of guilt, to perish for ever."

"There are time and room left for repentence, pardon and salvation."

"Yes, but I am a moral craven. I cannot live without being admired; much less can I live to be despised. Aut Cæsar aut nullus! I would rather die a thousand deaths than be spurned by the world that has so long worshiped me. Fanny is just my opposite. How refreshing it was to meet her! What a brave little girl she is, trampling the chains that bound me and made me a slave! How she scorns the world, its convention, its prejudices, its opinions and its hypocrisy! She spurns its flattery, provokes its censure, and outrages its decorum, not from wantonness or want of thought, but from conscious truth and mental superiority. I envy her frankness and greatness of heart, but I cannot imitate or approach virtue so free and genuine. Yet I love—yes, I adore her. The air of selfishness she wears—what is it but a cover for her overflowing goodness of heart! I have found out a hundred charities that she has done in secret. She is true and good, but I am false and vain. She is sublime, but I—I am ridiculous. How her beautiful lips must curl—how intense must be her pitiful scorn of me! Oh! that chaos would come again, and, burying me and all, hide my shame for ever."

I tried my best to console him, but he hardly heard and certainly did not heed what I said. As I parted from him, he grasped my hand and spoke with great earnestness and fervor.

"I have poured out my soul to you, and you will soon know why. George, I have but a yearning wish—be really and be happy! Be a man, as I am, and your [illegible] will be [illegible] down to the sea side. The night came on but brought no sleep to him. Early the next morning, before the other bathers were up, he ventured into the surf beyond his depth and was drowned. He was no swimmer, and it is believed that he predetermined and sought his death in this form. If he committed suicide, it was like the man to give it the semblance of accident and preserve appearances even in death.

I had been mistaken in the character both of Jacob and of Fanny. I had almost implicitly accepted their ingenious pretenses; but perhaps they had also deceived themselves. Jacob may at times have believed himself a saint, and Fanny have fancied herself the "little devil" she actually said she was. Yet, as I discovered the truth, I found that Fanny had a thousand fold more true reverence for divine things than Jacob Honeybane was ever capable of conceiving. He handled them in his familiar, canting way as very serviceable to his uses and abuses, but she concealed her profound veneration for them under an air of levity and kept herself aloof as unworthy of contact with them.

There was all the difference in the world between Jacob's and Fanny's piety. He loved to pray conspicuously in public meetings, but she, poor girl, in the closet in secret, with the door fast shut. His charity was all ostentation, but hers did not allow her left hand to know what her right was doing. His righteousness was like the boastful filial affection of Regan and Goneril, and hers like the genuine daughterly love of Cordelia.

But what surprised me most was the insight of each into the character of the other displayed by Jacob and Fanny. Here again she reminded me of Shakespeare's Cordelia, as indeed she does in the most essential elements of her character. King Lear was blind to the real disposition of his "dog-hearted" daughters, Regan and Goneril, but Cordelia's prophetic declaration,

"Time shall unfold what plaited cunning hides," shows how thoroughly she understood them. Jacob's perception of Fanny's nobleness surpassed mine. So Regan and Goneril betrayed their entire appreciation of their ingenious sister's worth in their most contemptuous condemnation of Lear's "poor judgment" in "casting her off." As Cordelia, by her too blunt truthfulness, belied her great tenderness and affection, so Fanny by her free speech and affectation of selfishness would fain have hidden from view the actual beauty, purity and holiness of her spirit. She jested at what she felt most deeply, and her audacious merriment, quick penetration and keen sarcasm were perhaps necessary to the perfect poise of a nature whose overflowing goodness, melting sympathy, ardent soul and excessive tenderness would have otherwise made her weak. While there seemed to be a laughing devil in her eye, there was a loving and adoring angel in her heart. And even when Pity's soft tyranny extorted tears,

"Those happy smiles
That play'd on her ripe lip, seem'd not to know
What guests were in her eyes, which parted thence
As pearls from diamonds dropp'd."

ZAVARR WILMSHURST.

Why He Got Into Trouble.

At the closing of a country school in a Massachusetts village, one of the committee of examination started to make some remarks in connection with a recitation in Greek history.

"We have heard," said he, "that when Alexander the Great conquered the city of Gaza, he caused a punishment to be inflicted upon Batis, the commander of the city, who had resisted him. This punishment, we learn, was the attaching of the living body of Batis to the wheel of a chariot which Alexander himself drove through the streets. Now, my dear children," continued the committeeman, "I was reading within a day or two something of the life of Alexander, and I recall that the article mentioned that Alexander learned when a child, the Iliad of Homer. Now in this Iliad we find that Achilles inflicted this same barbarous punishment upon Hector, over whom he was victorious."

At this point the face of a bright little boy from a neighboring city, who was visiting the school with his country cousins, lit up with an interest which did not escape the speaker.

"I think that this little man knows what I am going to say. Don't you, my boy?"

"Yes, sir," cried Tommy, triumphantly. "You mean that Alexander oughtn't ter have read dime novels."

Life in Arkansas.

A Little Rock letter gives us the following idea of life in Arkansas:

Long days of doing nothing beget little energy. Little food is needed, and less new clothing. In the fall and winter the crops are gathered and turned over to the merchant, who holds a mortgage. To sum up the labor of years: I was on the place the other day, and found an old double log house so nearly rotted down that it is propped up all around, the windows were without glass, the door frames without doors; the children could pass out between the logs in any direction; the lady and friend were sitting in the "gallery," a space between the two cabins, on split chairs, contentedly "dipping" snuff, while the lord and master, in dirty, begrimed clothes, sat under a tree, doing nothing, but looking as happy as the day is long. Fences rotted down and lean pigs, with "pokes" on them, twosorry-looking horses, trying to pick a living from short grass, and little children, half a dozen or more, with but a single garment on, were listlessly playing in the shade. The lands, originally poor, with but two or three inches of soil on the prairies, were worn out and abandoned.

TEN YEARS OF DEVOTION.

LOVE'S FIGHT WITH POVERTY AT LAST REWARDED.

The Romance of Henrietta Lillienfeldt and Edward Camradt Brightened by an Old Aunt's Legacy.

[From the New York Times.]

For many long years two German families lived together in peace and harmony on the banks of the Rhine. The yellow sunlight left the same tinge upon the grapes in the vineyards of each, which lay side by side, with an open gate swinging between them. The elder members of each family went out into the world early, and the youngest son of one and the youngest daughter of the other remained at home. They were Edward Camradt and Henrietta Lillienfeldt, and they grew up together.

Nothing interrupted the course of love until the time when each expected it to culminate in marriage. Then there was a sudden rupture in the families, and the stern father of each declared, with sturdy German oaths, that there could be no union between them. Moreover, a wealthy aunt of Henrietta, who had declared an intention of leaving a part of her fortune to her niece, threatened to leave her without a shilling should she marry young Camradt. This strengthened the opposition of Henrietta's parents, and the young people were almost in despair. Unable to endure living so near his sweetheart without seeing her, Camradt, left his home, just ten years ago, and started for America, where he expected a ready realization of the wonderful stories he had heard about the great new country.

Henrietta grew pale, sadder and thinner as the days went by, and one morning a month or two afterward she was missing. On a table in her room lay a note stating that she had gone to find her lover. As the years went by a rumor went over the sea back to the Fatherland to the sorrowing parents and the wealthy old aunt that she had found her lover and that they were happily married. She had found him, but they were not married. The world had not gone well with Camradt. His wild dreams had vanished, and he was in the depths of discouragement when his soul was rejoiced by the sudden coming of his sweetheart, who found him in a plainly furnished room at No. 18 Avenue B, in New York city, with little of the comforts of life and hardly enough of its necessities. He was too poor to marry, and accordingly she found a home in No. 20, close by, and the two struggled along together year after year. They never married because of their poverty and because Henrietta still remembered her aunt's threat, and she hoped that happiness would one day be brought to each by the provisions of the old lady's will. The other day a neat-looking German with a pleasant, kindly face and a light blonde mustache peered through the bars of the gate which swings out to admit visitors and prisoners to the Tombs. By his side was a smiling-faced little German woman, dressed in some dark cloth material, with a bunch of violets nodding from her hat. The faces of both were fairly beaming with some hidden joy which possessed them as the little man asked, in broken English, where he could find the Justice.

Warden Finn led the eager couple up the stairs, and in a few moments they had made their way with little ceremony to the private room where Justice Ford was sitting.

The little man took off his hat and bowed solemnly. "If you blease, sir," said he, "we w'ud like to ged marrid." At this the little woman smiled modestly and began to look very earnestly at the Justice.

"On Sunday?" asked his Honor.

"Yes," replied the man; "we muss marry ride away."

"But I never marry anybody."

"Ah!" broke in the woman, in a soft voice; "put we muss marry. We haf waited so long already, and we haf another reason vy we should marry ride away."

"What is it? Why are you in such a hurry?" asked Justice Ford.

"Vell," replied the little woman, quietly, "I haf just heard from Chermany. One of my relatives is dead, and she haf left me dwenty tousand dollars, und I muss marry here before I can get it."

"Twenty thousand dollars!" exclaimed the Justice in astonishment. "Why, what do you mean?"

"It is dis way, Judge," said the man. "You see der will gifs it to her as hafing my name, as my vife, und she muss be my vife before she gets it."

Then the mystery was explained. They were Edward Camradt and Henrietta Lillienfeldt. The rumor of their marriage which had gone back to the Fatherland was believed, and the wealthy old aunt, just before her death, which took place a short time ago, had forgiven them, and had bequeathed $20,000 to her niece as Mrs. Henrietta Camradt. The little woman told the above story, and how for the last ten years they had struggled along together in New York. He had obtained employment as a marble cutter, and she had sewed and worked at whatever she could find to do; and together they had fought poverty until the good news came of the fortune which had been bequeathed her. Then she had gone to Lawyer Wulfran, in Twenty-second street, who told her she must marry before she could claim it.

"Und now I am so happy," she concluded; "I haf to do just what I haf wanted to do for so many long years, as that I may ged $20,000 along with all de happiness that I haf ever wanted."

Justice Ford gave the delighted pair the address of Alderman Fink, by whom they were made one.

WHY HE LAUGHED.

While Mr. Schelling and his wife were in the waiting-room at Yonkers, Mrs. Schelling remarked in a low musical voice:

"I know, Ernest, that pa will relent, and then we will have a fine house, and jewelry, and horses, and carriages——"

"But no coachman," interrupted Mr. Schelling impressively.

The people outside, who were flattening their noses on the window, wondered why a railroad employee, who was in the waiting-room, and overheard the remark, suddenly doubled himself up as if seized with cramp colic.—Texas Siftings.

His wife, who accidentally overheard his talk, snapped out:

AN AMERICAN COUNTESS.

An Englishman was introduced at an evening reception in Washington to a charming lady, whom his friend said was a countess. The next day the two gentlemen were passing through the Treasury, and the young lady in question was discovered with a pile of bills in front of her. "I thought you said she was a countess?" remarked the Englishman. "I did, and she is considered one of the fastest countesses in the Department," was the answer. "Oh, I see," observed the visitor, and they passed on.

ACCEPTING A DAUGHTER'S CORRECTION.

There's an old legend of the time when Bidwell was candidate for Governor of California. He had a servant at the door, who demanded cards from his visitors before they could be admitted. Cards do not grow in the rural districts, and even the playing cards are not of the best quality. But the story has nothing to do with cards. One day an old farmer and his family called. The servant answered his call.

"Is the Governor's folks at home?" demanded the old farmer.

"Are, papa, are, not is," said the Seminary daughter.

"Are the Governor in?" said the old man, and the young lady fainted.

"And did she hurt you like this?"

At a Sunday school a teacher asked a new scholar, a little girl, what her name was. She replied: "Helen French." An urchin in an adjoining room sang out: "What is it in English?"

Another victory for the solid south. A school boy from Danville, Va., has been united in the holy bonds of matrimony to the widow of the late proprietor of Eastman's business college at Poughkeepsie.

The Selma Times was right in calling attention to the fact that Hon. H. C. Armstrong was unfitted for the duties of his present position as Speaker of the House of Representatives while his name is on the list of convict contractors.

The argument that the Railroad Commission has reduced freight and passenger tariffs in this State is a weak one. A legislative enactment could have done as much and caused less dissatisfaction on the part of the railroad companies that are assessed to pay the salaries of a commission appointed to regulate their private business.

The principal railroads of the State are asking the Legislature to repeal the law which assesses them to pay the salaries of the Railroad Commissioners. The railroads claim that the act is unconstitutional. It is like assessing Tom to pay wages to Dick who has been employed for the especial purpose of giving Tom an occasional kick.

The railroads of this State are doing, and have always done, more for its development than any other single agency. We will be dependent upon our railroads for an exhibit of our resources at New Orleans, just as we have often been dependent upon them elsewhere. Our Legislature should encourage and aid railroad enterprises rather than seek to strangle them with unwise and unjust legislation.

The published correspondence between M. H. Smith, president of the Louisville & Nashville railroad, and W. L. Bragg, president of the railroad commission of Alabama, developes some remarkable notions on the part of the commission as to its powers and jurisdiction. One of these was that the commission could fix western rates from Chicago, St. Louis and Louisville to Opelika. This is an extension of their jurisdiction over all the states from Alabama to the northern lakes. Another remarkable notion of the commission was that all the railroads that did not accept their recommendations were defying the laws of Alabama; whereas the statute makes their decisions only prima facia correct.—Birmingham Age.

Legislative.

Mr. Hundley's bill in reference to the Deaf and Dumb Institute at Talladega provides for the employment of a teacher of articulation, who shall teach orally such pupils as that method would benefit. It also empowers and instructs the Board of Commissioners to appoint an oculist, whose duty it shall be to visit the Institution as often as the Board shall direct, and operate on the eyes of such pupils as may need treatment.

The bill restores the annual appropriation from $15,000 to $18,000. It is certainly the part of humanity to provide for teaching everything to these unfortunates that will ameliorate their condition, and especially in the employment of an oculist demanded. If he restored sight to only one blind child, it would be worth all the cost.

A bill passed the House the other day to appropriate something over $3,000 for a deficiency in the contingent fund. This was all for money spent in trying to catch that distinguished patriot and thief, Isaac H. Vincent. The Governor has neglected no means that promised to bring him to justice.

The bill of Senator Brewer to amend section 3470 of the code is aimed as a relief in case the crop [illegible] to [illegible]. It provides [illegible] limited [illegible] [illegible] under such conditions as he may stipulate, in order to secure advances to his tenant. The law (Section 3870 of the code) now grants to a landlord the privilege of advancing under the landlord's rights and remedies to the amount the landlord and he may agree on, without making the landlord liable.

Mr. Hawkins has introduced a similar bill in the House.

SIXTH CIRCUIT.

To create the Ninth Judicial Circuit composed of the counties of Jackson, DeKalb, Cherokee, Etowah, Marshall, Blount and Cullman, the Judge and Solicitor to be appointed by the Governor at once, and hold office until the next general election and providing for the time of holding court in the various counties.

Mr. Hamill explained the necessity of the bill at length.

It was objected to because a bill to re-district the state is in preparation. The bill passed, yeas 23, nays 9.

Chairman Cory of the House Committee on public roads and highways has reported a good bill on this subject for passage.

Mr. Curry's bill appropriates $3,000 for printing and distributing at the World's Fair at New Orleans, copies of B. F. Riley's Alabama Guide Book, now in manuscript. The bill charges the duty of publication and distribution on the Secretary of State. Persons who have examined the book pronounce it the most complete, accurate and valuable compilation of facts concerning the resources and productions of Alabama yet written, and will place before visitors at New Orleans just what Alabama wants them to know.

The Birmingham Chronicle says in regard to pending temperance legislation:

The crazy quilt idea has even taken possession of the legislature. They are making and preparing to make the most curious and varied collection of prohibition laws of any State in America. The Book says, one law for the people and the stranger that is within thy gates. The legislature says, a different law for every county and every precinct within each county. In several sections of the State a man can now drive through three different temperance laws, in one day, with a mule team. This is ridiculous and tends to lessen the respect of the people for the law. The legislature should make one law for the whole State and abolish the ridiculous things now on the books.

PETITION.

Against Proposed Railroad Legislation.

Below we publish the petition of citizens of this county addressed to their Senator and Representative, protesting against the enactment of pending legislation providing for the regulation of railroads, fixing rates and increasing the authority of the Railroad Commission. Similar petitions have been extensively signed by the citizens of Mobile, Birmingham, Decatur, Huntsville, Stevenson, Bridgeport, Athens, Florence, Tuscumbia, and in fact all points along the lines of nearly all the railroads within the State. It is evident that the legislation recommended by the Railroad Commission, and now pending in the Senate and House of Representatives, is not demanded or desired by the people who use the railroads the most. It is said that ninety-nine per cent of the shippers, those who are the most directly interested, are opposed to such legislation. Almost without exception, every one to whom the petitions have been presented it is said signed them without hesitation.

To Hon. Jefferson Falkner, Senator, and Hon. K. Wells, Representative from Chilton county.

We, the undersigned citizens of Chilton county in the State of Alabama, who are largely interested in business and trade from abroad, from experience have learned the difficulty of adjusting rates of transportation to meet the conflicting wants of trade, respectfully and earnestly ask that you will consider the harm which will result to the business interests of the State by legislation seeking to control the laws of trade.

Business and trade from abroad are dependent upon so many contingencies and controlled by so many circumstances which cannot be foreseen, that we fear remedies proposed for local grievances will cause more harm than good.

Our iron, coal, manufacturing, saw mill, vegetable and lime business, our mercantile, cotton and other agricultural trade are largely dependent upon the rates which the roads in this State, in connection with other States are able to give persons interested.

To discriminate these rates to [illegible] attempt to control them on a basis [illegible] paralyzing these large industries and interests and entail great suffering upon the business community.

Any cast iron tube which is made the basis for controlling commerce from abroad, will not only react upon the consumers and others interested, but will deprive our own roads of the power of successful competition and thus reduce their ability to build up our own State.

We believe it is far better to leave such matters to adjust themselves or to the regulation of the government of the United States which can act throughout the country, than to attempt to remedy by State laws.

We therefore urge upon your Honorable Body not to enact any law which will interfere with the freedom of commerce, and use every effort to prevent the great evil inevitably resulting from such legislation.

Jemison Jottings.

EDITOR:—A few dots from our little town, the star city of its age, size and number of inhabitants.

I don't think Jemison can be excelled anywhere on the L. & N. railroad. In the first place, we have a fine school under the management of Prof. Burns, a man possessed of many good qualities. In the next place, we have a fine Sunday school that can't be beat in the county. The school numbers one hundred and upwards of regular attendants.

Our town is rapidly improving. The Baptist Church has been repaired, which adds considerably to its looks. We also have a new Cumberland Presbyterian Church building nearing completion, which is a credit to our little town. Mr. J. P. Allen stands at the head of the list ever ready to aid in a good cause. If we had a few more just such men in our midst how things would move. The Presbyterians anticipate dedicating their new church on the third Sunday in each month. Rev. Dr. Oliver, of Calera, and Rev. A. E. Burns, of Jemison, will assist Rev. Mr. Armstrong, the pastor, in the dedication. Mr. J. P. Allen has bought a two hundred and fifty dollar organ and a fine stove and given them to the church. Why should we not boast of such a man in our midst.

As to the health of our little town it is very good. Mr. C. H. Smith has been quite sick, but we are glad to see him on our streets again.

Business is a little dull, cotton coming in slowly, and people complaining of short crops and hard times, but you can hear the sound of the hammer from daylight until dark, improving in various ways their houses and lots.

Christmas is drawing near, the little ones are beginning to talk of Santa Claus. We wish them a happy time. We once was young. WARRIOR.

Stanton Dots.

Death has invaded our little village within the past week. Mrs. Anderson, wife of Mr. Wm. Anderson and formerly a Mrs. Sims, died on the morning of the 1st inst., leaving husband, children and many friends to mourn her loss. She was conscious to the last, and in conversation with Rev Mr. Ruddick about an hour before her departure expressed a lively faith in a crucified Redeemer and firm hope of a blessed immortality.

Who would not live in our sunny Southern land? While our neighbors of the North are plunged in the depths of gloomy winter, we are enjoying balmy breezes which are generally associated with our ideas of Spring. While in every newspaper we receive information of stoppage of work or large reduction of wages with the inevitable consequences of suffering and destitution among the working classes there, we have an abundance of work for those who are willing to work, with fairly remunerative wages for all classes. Peace and plenty are enjoyed in all our borders. A new South is arising Phoenix-like from the ashes of the old. Honest labor is everywhere respected and we bid fair in a few brief years to command the envy and respect of the whole civilized world. So mote it be.

Section 1. Approved, Dec. 3, 1884.

Official:

ELLIS PHELAN, Secretary of State.

Mr. Pratt's Liability.

A bill has been introduced introduced into the Legislature looking to the relief of Mr. M. E. Pratt as security on Vincent's bond. This bill has brought out the following information as to the financial condition of Mr. Pratt, which we copy from the Montgomery Advertiser:

Mr. Pratt's whole property, real and personal, amounts to about $77,000 over his sworn statement. The bulk of his fortune is in the good will of his business. His debts amount to considerably over $150,000. On the gin shop, the actual property in which he values at $30,000, there is a mortgage of $100,000 which is prior to the State's claim. Every business man is bound to know that the $100,000 mortgage would absorb the gin shop. On more than half of his other property there is a vendor's lien ahead of the State for its full value, and the balance is in odds and ends around Pratville and in his furniture, &c.

Among the unsecured debts of Mr. Pratt is one for $18,000 to his foreman, for services. This foreman has been there for many years and this $18,000 in his employer's hands represented the earnings of his lifetime. Another is for $15,000 due other hands in the gin shop. On his debts which are secured by mortgages and liens ahead of the State's, he has to make interest payments close on $10,000 a year. His income is fluctuating some years over $20,000, some years nothing. He believes now that he can not pay $12,000 a year for five years to the State. He made a complete showing to the committee appointed to compromise the debt, and offered to pay $30,000. The committee declined, positively, to settle at those figures.

Finally he induced the committee to make him a proposition, and they said $60,000 or a suit. His friends advised against it, but seeing one hope ahead, the legislature, he, accepted.

The nature of his business requires the use of his credit and almost at its limit to meet these 12,000 dollar payments he must borrow nearly every dollar of the money. By suit or foreclosure of its claims, if Mr. Pratt's statement be true, and there is no reason to doubt it, the State cannot get the amount of one of these payments. If its claim has any value it is in Mr. Pratt's skill and brain, not his property.

American Ahead.—Peculiar Characteristics of Americans—The Evils and How Restored.

In this age of bustle and hurry, an age devoted to great projects and enterprises the American people are taking the lead in the furtherance of noble works, and in the advancement of the sciences and arts. In these they deserve to take a high rank, and through the united works of millions, the American continent is fast being transformed from its untamed state and being placed on an equality with the older continents beyond the ocean. The American people are fast, under these influences developing into a nervous, energetic race, remarkable for its vim and business qualifications; yet there is danger that in the course of years these very elements may combine to the ruination of the physical character of the people, and leave them feeble and altogether different from their forefathers. General debility is now much more common than formerly, and seems to be on the increase among the masses. Many remedies have been extensively advertised for this widespread complaint, but none of these have been so successful or met with such general favor as the remedy manufactured by Dr. S. B. Hartman, and named by him PERUNA.

Mr. S. S. Goudy, of Massillon, Stark county, Ohio, writes: That he has been troubled with general debility and dyspepsia for several years; that he was induced to try PERUNA for his complaints, and that after using three bottles of the medicine he was greatly relieved. It braced him right up and gave him energy, and restored him to his youthful vigor. He ascribes his cure to PERUNA, and says it is a wonderful remedy.

Adolph Bakhaus & Co., Springfield, O., writes: "We are having a good sale for PERUNA. It sells as well as any medicine we have, and gives the very best satisfaction."

Mrs. C. W. Newham, Newtonville, Clermont County, Ohio, says: "I have been a great sufferer for the last six or seven years, with general debility and change of life. I was very much reduced. I have taken four bottles of PERUNA, which has restored me to perfect health and strength. We think PERUNA a safe and grand medicine."

NO APOLOGY FOR SUICIDE.

TALMAGE PREACHES UPON THE COWARDICE OF SELF-DESTRUCTION.

He Ascribes the Increase of Deaths to Control to the Baleful Influence of Infidelity and Agnosticism—The Moral Remedy.

"Suicide" was the subject of Mr. Talmage's sermon on Sunday, and the speaker was listened to with marked attention throughout. His text was taken from the acts of the Apostle—Sixteenth chapter and parts of the twenty-seventh and twenty-eighth verses.

"And the keeper * * * drew out his sword and would have killed himself, supposing the prisoners had fled.

"But Paul cried with a loud voice saying, 'Do thyself no harm; for we are all here.'"

Mr. Talmage said that there was a would-be suicide arrested in his deadly attempt at death. According to the old Roman law the Sheriff must suffer if a prisoner escaped. If the prisoner had been sentenced to confinement for three or four years and escaped the Sheriff or Bailiff must suffer the same penalty for his lack of vigilance, and if the prisoner escaped while awaiting the execution of capital punishment the Sheriff would have to undergo the same penalty. The Government had not much confidence in the ability of the officers to keep those two clergymen safe. Sure enough, they were not safe because of their supernatural power. The Sheriff, therefore, resolved to precipitate his own decease; but before the glittering dagger could strike his heart Paul arrested him.

In olden times suicide was considered an honorable means of ending one's existence. Here Mr. Talmage cited the tragic deaths of Demosthenes, Mithridates, Hannibal, Lycurgus and other ancient men of renown, to illustrate his point. After Moscow, he said, Napoleon, who always carried a preparation of opium, took it. His servant heard his groans and roused his attendants. A physician was called, and it was only by dint of the greatest skill that the great warrior was finally roused from his stupor.

Mr. Talmage said the time had come when the American public must be stirred up on the suicide mania. There was scarcely a newspaper but had reports of deaths self-inflicted. We heard of defaulters and embezzlers rushing to self-destruction on the discovery of their crimes, and domestic troubles, anger, remorse, destitution and misanthropy were considered causes enough for the rash act of suicide. The methods of ending life were touched upon, and the speaker said there had been more suicides within the last month than there had been within the past twelve months.

The pulpit had lately discussed the question whether or no suicide was not justifiable. He would show them before he got through that suicide was the worst of crimes. Some Christians committed it in dementia, and were not responsible. He had no doubt whatever about their future happiness. The dear Lord took them right out of this life to Himself under such circumstances. To substantiate this statement the speaker referred to the Scriptures.

Mentioning Hugh Miller and his works, Mr. Talmage said that man had done more to show that God was the God of the hills than any other man living, as shown by "His Testimony of the Rocks" and other books. And yet he was killed by a bullet from a revolver, the same weapon also causing the death of a smith who was handling it. The speaker asked:

"Have you any doubt, after this, of the beatification of God?" Mr. Talmage next turned his attention to Cowper and his attempts to stab and hang himself. After he recovered from his dementia, Cowper wrote that wonderful hymn:

God moves in a mysterious way,
His wonders to perform;
He plants His footsteps on the sea
And rides upon the storm.

To prove the fate of the real murderer and sane self-destroyer, the reverend gentleman quoted from Revelations, viii. 21, and v. 22. "God," he said, "made them the custodian of their lives, and he gave them two arms and hands to defend it." Suicide was treason to God, and was worse than murder. There was the headless trunk of Saul, and there was the giant Goliath, who planted the hilt of his sword in the ground and let his body fall upon the sharp point, with deadly effect. Bible history, to illustrate the point that suicide under sane conditions was worse than murder, was further cited. And yet in this day there had been uncovered a statue to George Sand, and Judas Iscariot was imitated by many. There was Job, with all his carbuncles and the chief curse of all, a pestiferous wife, suffering patiently and yet living on. The audience was startled by the remark about Job's wife, and gave vent to a buzz of mingled mirth and surprise.

It is an alarming fact, Mr. Talmage declared, that suicide is on the increase. What was the cause? He charged to infidelity and agnosticism the whole trouble. There never had been a case of suicide where a man had his future life in view and had adopted Jesus Christ and committed self-destruction in a sane moment. Infidelity said: "If you don't like this life get out of it," and infidelity had always been an apologist for suicide.

Rome, Gibbon, Voltaire and Payne were apologists for immolation. Mr. Talmage asserted that no matter how his hearers went out of this world they would land in a glorious somewhere or an oblivious nowhere. He did not know whether the greatest dramatist (Shakespeare) was a Christian or not, and taking a book from the small table behind him, Mr. Talmage read the passage from Hamlet's soliloquy, beginning with:

For who could bear the quips, etc.

"Would to God," said the speaker, "that the Coroners would render their verdicts in exact accordance with the facts in cases where the suicide has been driven to his death by the teachings of infidels and agnostics."

Becoming warmed up with his subject, Mr. Talmage became more demonstrative, and stamping his foot on the floor he said: "Stand up, Infidelity, thou buzzard, thou leper of the nation; part dragon, part vulture. Stand up and take thy sentence. Down with thee into the bottomless pit, and let thy name be the everlasting Misnomer for those whom thou hast damned."

Addressing the congregation he said: "I say your life should become a sacrifice to put accursed pyrotechnic displays here more beautiful than you have given the world, the finest specimen by premium life insurance companies. God says the sanctity of the human body is the temple of the Holy Ghost, and he might have a thousand reasons for wanting to go to the great eternal world, but they would never get there by self-immolation and infidelity."

Raising his eyes and hands to heaven, Mr. Talmage closed with this earnest expression: "Oh, God! whatever others may choose, give me a Christian burial and a Christian's mortality."

HOW MY BABY DIED.

A Tender Reminiscence Wrung from a Mother's Heart.

The doctor said it was a severe cold, and prescribed for it. He went away and returned in an hour without being called. Then I knew my baby boy was more ill than I had thought, and when he went away, I followed him out of the house and into the snow-burdened air, and said to him:

"Doctor, tell me the truth. Will my baby die?"

"It is very ill," he replied, "but there is yet a little hope." Then I returned and looked again on that sweet face of my little boy. Where dimples had been, were hard white lines of pain. Where the nostrils had been such a soft and velvety pink, you could see the light shine through their walls, and every hair-like vein was blue almost to blackness. The little hands which I was wont to feel patting my cheeks had lost their cunning, and were lying uselessly on its heaving bosom, purple and clenched. I knew my baby was not for long. I knew that even the angels, who loved it a little better than I, were waiting to take it away. I saw the death-dew stand in diamond beads upon its alabaster brow and felt the dampening curls, that clustered like falling sunshine where I had been wont to kiss it. I heard the faint gurgling in my baby's throat, and saw no recognition in its eyes, once so soft and blue, and laughing, but now glassy with the film of death. They were looking through the ceiling and roof of my humble cottage, into the realms where the Recording Angel sat, with the book of life open before him, at a page as white as snow, save where the name was written at the top—the name of my darling boy.

The snow flakes ceased to fall, and the glad sunlight from the west came in through the window and fell upon my baby's bed, flooding it with radiance and glory like that which trembles on the golden tiles of heaven, and then the sun sank out of view, and in the gray twilight my baby lay, struggling body and soul, the one with the other, for the mastery. As the shadows deepened, I saw the bony hand of death reach out from among the pillows, and clutch my baby by the throat. I tried to fight the monster back, but he would not loose his hold.

The lamps were lighted and I saw my baby smile, as if it saw a face more welcome, kind and sweet, than the face of her that bore it, bending over its cradle—the face of Him who said: "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of God," and while it yet smiled, the soul went out from the tabernacle of clay, and left the temple tenantless and cold, but beautiful as life itself. My baby was dead, and I was clasping to my heart only the clay image of its soul, now winging its flight through the boundless depths of blue that lie between the grave and the throne of God. Is it a wonder that men worship idols of clay, when clay is so grandly beautiful as this?

I slept and dreamed, and as I dreamed, I saw the pearly gates swing open, and I knew my baby reached home. I caught a glimpse of heaven, and saw it fly straight to the arms of Him who died upon the cross, and ere the gates were closed, the angel with the book drew his wand across the page and held it up to the others, and I saw that nought but the name of my darling boy was there, written in charcaters of shining gold; while all the rest was pure and white, and as the gates swung shut, the harps of millions sang a glad refrain.

Carrying Bundles.

In the matter of carrying bundles: A gentleman of three-score years—a millionaire—was once clerk in a bookstore and tells this story of the late Jonathan Phillips, who came into the store one morning and purchased a book. After doing it up, the clerk said: "Mr. Phillips, I will send this to your house." "No," said he; "young man, I will tell you a secret. When you get to be as old as I am you will learn that the most independent man is he who is his own servant." It is related of Dr. Parkman—the same who was murdered—that whenever he bought a leg of mutton he carried it home himself. On being asked why he did this, he said "he wanted to be sure of the one he had picked out." There is somewhere a dictum of Lord Eldon, the famous English lawyer and judge, that a lawyer might properly carry through the streets a green bag or a fresh fish. The latter perhaps for the same reason that Dr. Parkman carried his mutton. But query, whether this would be good law in Beacon street? An eminent ex-judge of Massachusetts, who was born in the country, returning to Boston with a classmate from a short journey, kindly carried the portmanteau of the latter through the streets in order to save his feelings in case they should meet any Bostonese of his acquaintance. This was almost half a century ago. To-day so many men, women, and children are rushing about with bundles to reach the cars that even an undergraduate of Harvard might not be ruined if seen with a portmanteau—especially one made of alligator skin. Whether the polite public would tolerate a fresh fish or a leg of mutton is doubtful. Perhaps some of our readers may remember the horror expressed by an English traveler at seeing President Lincoln with a parcel in his hand. That such a man could succeed in the war then raging the Englishman could not believe. That will do for bundles. * * * And this expression reminds us of a little story related by Mr. Longfellow. A Parisian once remarked to him that there was one American word that he never could understand or find in any dictionary. "What is it?" inquired the poet. "Thatcldo," was the reply. "I never heard of this word," said Longfellow. Presently a servant came in to replenish the fire. After putting on a little fuel Longfellow remarked to him, "That will do." "Ha!" exclaimed the Frenchman, "that is the very word which has troubled me."

American, Aren't You?

Some years ago, says a San Francisco letter, an emigrant from this country kept a small restaurant in a town situated in one of the great stock-raising districts of South Australia. He was presumably the only Yankee in those parts. There was an enormously rich old stockman who came into town from his lordly cattle range at intervals, whose nationality was a matter of doubt, though he usually passed for a taciturn and uncommunicative bachelor Scotchman.

One day this wealthy but solitary old chap entered the restaurant of the man from the States. When he left he looked hard at the proprietor, and then simply remarked:

"American, aren't you?"

On being answered in the ammative, the millionaire cow-puncher walked away without another word.

Regularly once a week he reappeared, silently ate a hasty lunch, and made the same stereotyped inquiry, receiving the same emphatic "Yes, siree!" in reply. At last there came a time when the eccentric old customer did not return. One month went by—two. At last a wagon stopped at the door, and the old fellow, pale and wasted with sickness, was helped out and supported into the saloon. He called for his usual steak, with weak but dogged determination, ate a morsel, and then tottered up to the counter. As he paid his bill he whispered hoarsely:

"American, aren't you?"

"You bet," replied the proprietor, pleasantly.

Stretching out his shaking hand, the old customer said:

"Shake! So am I."

Then he tottered away without another word. Three days afterward a lawyer came into our young countryman's place and told him that the queer old guy over on the Paramatta range had died and left him a cool million dollars.

THE WORLD'S GRANITE.

WHERE THEY DIG POST OFFICES.

An Island that is Distributed in Granite Rocks All Over the Country.

All over the United States, in the larger cities may be seen great buildings, handsome and costly specimens of architecture, and structures which are marvels of engineering skill, the carved and polished walls and towers of which once lay in ragged masses on a little island far out in the bosom of Penobscot Bay in Maine. This island is the southerly of a picturesque pair known as North Fox and South Fox, each being incorporated as a town, named respectively North Haven and Vinalhaven. It was as long ago as 1765 that South Fox saw its first white settlers, and twenty-four years afterward it was incorporated as a town, named as above for John Vinal, Esq., of Boston, some of whose relatives yet live on the island. The southerly half of this sea-girt town is one solid mass of beautiful granite, and the quarrying of this stone has created a pretty village of 2,000 people at one of the many snug coves—Carver's Harbor.

For nearly half a century stone for building and paving has been sent from Vinalhaven, but it was not until the decade of 1850-1860 that very much was done. In 1851 Moses Webster and J. R. Bodwell, one a New Hampshire boy, and the other from Massachusetts, went to the rocky island, and with a capital of about $300 began quarrying operations. They had few tools and no machinery, but got out the stone the best way they knew, and then slowly conveyed it to the shore on drags drawn by cattle. When the Government built two big fronts in New York harbor in 1852 or '53 the contract for furnishing the stone was given to Bodwell & Webster, who managed to fill the bill all right, and thus got a good start in the world. Since then they have prospered, and now do probably the largest quarrying business in the United States, employing from 500 to 1,000 men, as the volume of trade varies, paying $25,000 to $50,000 a month in wages and keeping the whole island community happy and prosperous.

To see 500 quarrymen, teamsters, blacksmiths, cutters and polishers all at work, "hammer and tongs," is an interesting sight. Were it not for the fact that granite is found in strata of quite uniform thickness, quarrying would be a most difficult and expensive operation, and a great part of the stone would be wasted. When a quantity of stone is to be taken out the first thing necessary is to make a "head," that is to cut downward through the horizontal strata until a whole transverse section of a layer is exposed to the foundation. Then, at the desired distance back from this head, which resembles a ditch twenty to fifty feet long, the quarrymen drill what are known as "Miller holes" into the granite, A Miller hole consists of three triangular orifices, drilled close together, and some depth into the stone. Generally one group suffices; occasionally two or three are drilled. Into these holes are poured tremendous charges of giant powder, which, when exploded start the whole mass of stone as far as the "head" from its strata bed. After that it is easily split up by driving little iron wedges into a series of holes drilled on the dimension line. Immense derricks, guyed up by heavy wire rigging, and operated by stationary steam engines, swing the stone from place to place in the quarry, out of their reach rollers of iron and hard wood are used for the heaviest pieces. Ponderous trucks, drawn by 1,500-pound horses, go floundering along toward the cutting shops with great blocks triced up under their rear axles with chains. The truck wheels being about fifteen feet high, it will be seen that a large stone can be carried in this way without dragging.

The quarrymen work the year round, and average $1.65 per day; boys $1.50, and cutters $2.75 to $3.20. All the tools, except one kind of hammer, are furnished by the company.

At the Sands Quarry, Vinalhaven, not long ago, one of the largest, if not the largest, pieces of granite every quarried was taken out for the Gen. Wool monument at Troy, N. Y. It was from ten to fifteen feet square and sixty feet long. After all the labor and expense, however, the monstrous stone was found to contain a flaw; it was rejected and another had to be cut.

A beautiful monument for Dr. William Gibson and wife, of Jamestown, Pa. (who are not yet dead, by the way), is in progress there. It will stand on a sarcophagus, and will consist of a tall pillar with ornamental base and cap, to be surmounted by a statue representing Faith. The work has taken two years now, and the monument will cost $65,000.

In Vinalhaven every man can have granite door steps, granite hitching posts, and even a walk or curb of granite before his house, at little or no expense. One man who lives near the shore has a wharf of this neat white stone for his private use, and there is no reason why all hands shouldn't have granite houses, except, perhaps, that they haven't time to build them, for there are thousands of tons of the material thrown away for slight imperfections in color.

That part of Vinalhaven which has been dug up and shipped away as granite of late years is distributed principally thus: Chicago Board of Trade; Cincinnati Custom House and Post Office; Atlanta, Ga., Post Office and Court House; Fall River Custom House and Post Office; East River Bridge; St. Louis Bridge over Mississipp i; basement and sub-basement Albany Post Office; lower part of new State War and Navy building, Washington; basement and sub-basement Pittsburg, Pa., Post Office, Wells building; New York city, and many miles of paving.

There is enough stone left on the breezy little island to build all the Post Offices, big bridges, and monuments for an indefinite period. All they take away doesn't seem to make much of a hole.

The Best of the Three.

Thomas Wentworth Higginson, in a letter to the Press, says: I remember that soon after the war, when I was urging an eminent employer of labor to give occupation to all the returning soldiers who came in his way, he pointed to three men at work in his hay-field, and said: "One of those men was a private soldier; he is the best man I ever hired. Another was his captain; he does his work very well. The third was the colonel of his regiment, and all I can say is, that if that is the way they ranks as they go upward, I should be sorry to hire any engagement of any price." The moral is, that the best war is long since over, and we should now pay no [illegible]

A Fast Hold.

John Quick of Green, Pa., went out to shoot a woodchuck. He shot the animal as it sat sunning itself at the mouth of its burrow, and it fell over. Quick walked up to pick up his game. He took hold of one of the woodchuck's fore legs, when the animal let him know that it was not yet dead by closing its jaws on the hunter's wrist. Its teeth almost met in his arm, and the hold was not relaxed, and the woodchuck died with its teeth buried in the flesh. Quick was unable to get the jaws loose, and, having no knife to cut them loose, he was obliged to walk a mile home with the dead animal fast to his wrist. By the time he reached home his wrist and arm were badly swollen. The jaws of the woodchuck were cut loose and removed. It is feared that Quick will lose his arm.

SOAP.—An English firm of soap manufacturers spends about $160,000 a year in advertising. It employs capable artists, essayists and poets, and sends a package of soap gratuitously to each of the infants whose birth is announced in the London Times.

A Printer's Error.

Sweet are the uses of adversity, the printer copy said, but he set it up, sweet are the uses of advertising. Sweet, indeed, to those who in sickness and suffering have seen the advertisement of some sovereign remedy, which upon trial has brought them from death's door. "The best thing I ever saw in my paper was the advertisement of Dr. Pierce's 'Golden Medical Discovery'" is again and again the testimony of those who have been healed by it of lung disease, bronchial affections, tumors, liver complaints and the ills to which flesh is heir.

A Case Beyond Help.

Dr. M. H. Hinsdale, Kenawee, Ill., advises us of a remarkable cure of consumption. He says: "a neighbor's wife was attacked with violent lung disease and pronounced beyond help from quick consumption. As a last resort the family was persuaded to try Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the Lungs. To the astonishment of all, by the time she had used one half dozen bottles, she was about the house doing her own work. The new Upright Pianos of Mason & Hamlin are highly praised by good judges. They possess a refinement of musical tone which charms the connoisseur and all who hear it. This is owing largely to the new system of their construction. The great experience of Mason & Hamlin in their organ business, with the aid of their large corps of superior musical and mechanical experts, has enabled them, after several years of expensive experiments, to produce a piano which bids fair to do more for their reputation than even their famous organs have accomplished. Their chief improvement consists in securing the strings by metallic fastenings, instead of pins held by friction, which renders it easy to put the three strings of each tone exactly in unison, and thereby produce tones of wonderful sweetness and purity. Messrs. Mason & Hamlin have made 150,000 cabinet organs. They can hardly hope to reach this number of pianos, but we doubt not their new "upright" will command a very large sale.—Boston Traveller.

A LESSON IN COURTESY.

HOW A CELEBRATED ACTRESS WAS RECEIVED AT ABBOTSFORD.

An Incident in Which Sir Walter Scott Played a Part.

When Mrs. Coutts, the actress, visited Sir Walter Scott at Abbotsford, it so happened that there were already in the house several ladies, Scotch and English, of high birth and rank, who felt by no means disposed to assist their host and hostess in making Mrs. Coutts's visit agreeable to her. On the first day of her stay Sir Walter during dinner did everything in his power to counteract this influence of the evil eye, and something to overawe it; but the spirit of mischief had been fairly stirred, and it was easy to see that Mrs. Coutts followed these noble dames to the drawing-room in by no means that complacent mood which was customarily sustained, doubtless, by every blandishment of obsequious flattery in this mistress of millions. He cut the gentlemen's sederunt short and, soon after joining the ladies, managed to withdraw the youngest, the gayest and cleverest, who was also the highest in rank (a lovely Marchioness) into his armorial hall adjoining.

He said to her:—"I want to speak a word to you about Mrs. Coutts. We have known each other a good while, and I know you won't take anything I can say in ill part. It is, I hear, not uncommon among the fine ladies in London to be very well pleased to accept invitations, and even sometimes to hunt after them, to Mrs. Coutts's grand balls and fetes; and then if they meet her in any private circle, to practice on her any delicate manœuvre called tipping the cold shoulder. This you agree with me is shabby, but it is nothing new either to you or to me—the fine people will do shabbiness for which beggars might blush, if they once stoop so low as to poke for tickets. I am sure you would not for the world do such a shabby thing; but you must permit me to take the great liberty of saying that I think the style you have all received my guest, Mrs. Coutts, in this evening, is to a great extent a sin of the same order. You were all told a couple of days ago, that I had accepted her visit, and that she would arrive to-day to stay three nights. Now, if any of you had not been disposed to be of my party at the same time with her, there was plenty of time for you to have gone away before [illegible]; and as none of you moved, and [illegible] impossible for you to fancy that any of you would remain out of mere curiosity, I thought I had a perfect right to [illegible]ulate on your having made up your [illegible]s to help me out with her."

The beautiful peeress answered:

"I thank you, Sir [illegible]ter. You have done me the greate[illegible]nor to speak as if I had [illegible]n your [illegible]ughter, and depend upon it you shall [illegible] obeyed with heart and good will."

One by one the other exclusives were seen engaged in a little tete-a-tete with her ladyship. Sir Walter was soon satisfied that things had be[illegible] put in a right train; the Marchion[illegible]s was requested to sing a particular song, because he thought it would please Mrs. Coutts.

"Nothing could gratify her more than to please Mrs. Coutts."

Mrs. Coutts's brow smoothed, and in the course of half an hour she was as happy and easy as ever she was in her life, rattling away at comic anecdotes of her early theatrical days, and joining in the chorus of the "Laird of Cockpen."

The Explosion of Boilers.

A frequent cause of boiler explosions not generally understood, and all the more insidious for being so little recognized, has been recently brought to notice by M. Treves, an eminent French engineer. Water left standing for hours above the boiling point loses its power of ebullition, the air in it being driven off; and in this condition it absorbs heat without the power of delivering it up in the form of steam. It thus becomes superheated, and any mechanical agitation—such as opening of the steam-valve or the introduction of fresh water—may cause it instantaneously to burst into steam with explosive force. These are the very conditions to be found in a boiler when, as often happens, work has been suspended for an interval, during which, the boiler being filled, the fires are left burning, though slackened. When work is resumed, the engineer, finding a good supply of water with a low pressure on the steam gauge, fires up without putting in more water, and there is another mysterious explosion.

A good and simple device to guard against this danger has been proposed by MM. Donny and Gernez, and is recommended by M. Treves. The water feed-pipe is prolonged by a T, the horizontal branch being about nine inches above the bottom of the boiler. On the under side of this tube, along its entire length, from end to end of the boiler, is a row of conical nipples. [illegible]

Insects in the Garden.

Dr. Sturtevant in a recent bulletin issued from the experiment station at Geneva, N. Y., says:

The perfect remedy should destroy the worms wherever it touches them, and should not injure the plant in the least under any number of applications.

BAKED WEALTH.

A Farmer Puts His Fortune in an Oven and Finds It in a Pile of Ashes.

"Mr. Jacob Leib, a farmer, of West Millcreek, has been ruined by too much precaution," says an Erie (Penn.) dispatch. For the last month the villages around Erie have been worked pretty thoroughly by a gang of professional burglars, the two leaders of whom have been captured. Farmer Lieb is one of those who believed a bird in the hand to be worth two in the bush. He has never deposited his savings in the bank, but kept his money and valuables in a safe at home, where the treasure would always be under his eye.

The operations of the burglars [illegible] neighborhood convinced him [illegible] do not always save, therefo[illegible] cluded to be too cunning fo[illegible] men. Removing his greenb[illegible] ing to $5,000, with notes, mor[illegible] other valuable documents repre[illegible] as much more, he concealed them [illegible] oven of a parlor stove that is not g[illegible] ally used until the winter has fairly [illegible] in. As an extra precaution he [illegible] cluded not to tell Mrs. Leib, least in a moment of weakness she should give his cuteness away in gossip. The project worked like a charm.

At Union City safes were being cracked and dwelling-houses being entered all around, but his treasure remained all safe in the oven. One morning it was discovered that an unsuccessfull attempt had been made to burglarize his residence, but the discovery only served to tickle him. Mrs. Leib was seriously alarmed for the safety of their possessions, but her husband bade her be of good cheer, and trust to his sagacity.

That night he came to Erie on business, and during his absence the first snow-storm of the season occurred. Thinking of the husband's cold ride, Mrs. Leib planned a little surprise for him, and so prepared a dainty and tempting supper, spreading it in their cosy parlor, lighting the fire to add to Mr. Leib's comfort. When he arrived and took in the situation he almost fainted. Rushing to the stove he opened the oven door and pulled out a charred mass that once represented their fortune, but which was now not worth a cent. On Saturday he brought the ashes to the court-house, but obtained no comfort.

A Georgia justice of the peace had an important case to come up before him a few weeks since which involved a point in law, and the best legal talent of the town was arrayed on both sides. After all the evidence had been submitted, one of the lawyers arose and proceeded to argue the case, when he was interrupted by the attorney on the other side. Just at this point the justice, who was looking out of the window, discovered a black cloud looming up in the west, and rising forward he said: "Gentlemen, you may talk about this case as much as you please; but I've got to go home and set out some potato slips. Corderie's Mills.

These mills are now complete, and after thorough tests are pronounced by all a perfect success. For convenience, durability and quality of work done by them, they are not surpassed in the county. The work was designed and executed by Mr. J. W. Maddox, a natural mechanic whose sole aim is the benefit of his employer, and withal a clever christian gentleman. He was assisted throughout by Capt. Sam Dennis, who executed to the letter every suggestion of the principal. He has had a life time's experience as a mechanic in the construction of mills and milling. I retain the Captain as miller, and he will take pleasure in serving his friends and the public generally, with that politeness and honest dealing which has ever characterized him.

Now we beg with feelings of profound gratitude to … many customers for past favors … by strict attention and promptness, and fair dealing with … to maintain our … for … ain our old patrons … new ones. Come … all at once.

I am now prepared to furnish lumber in small or large quantities to farmers and others. My object is to build up a lumber trade with resident farmers and in order to do so, I shall offer the best grade of lumber to them in small quantities, and will take farm products, corn and cotton, in payment for same. My mill is situated two miles east of Clanton, and is first-class in every respect. I propose to deliver lumber at mill or have it shipped by rail, and parties will be courteously waited on and satisfaction will be guaranteed.
